What happens at the Berkeley Psychic Institute?

From the graduation address given by Rev. Michael Ching on his Graduation as a Teacher in the Yin Yang Seminary for Psychic Children/Church of Divine Man

About two years ago, when I graduated from the Minister's-in-Training Program of the Church of Divine Man, a not too small and not too tall lady with a gleam in her eye, named Rev. Mary Bell, said hello to me. She asked me if I would be interested in a program that involved psychic kids. Being somewhat of a kid myself, I said that I would check it out.

That first morning I remember having to be in Santa Rosa by 8 am AND IT WAS COLD. The only way to get warm was to move around alot; so, of course, I was asked to sit and run my energy, just to observe the children and blow any matching pictures that got lit up. (Neutralize any concepts or emotions that are brought up when observing some of the same experiences the children were having...editor) I not only froze, I went unconscious as well. And when I was not unconscious, I was saying to myself, "What am I doing here?"

So with that question in mind, I decided to join the Yin Yang Seminary Teachers Training Program. Well, a funny thing happened to me when I did join; I became the first man to sign up for this program. This did nothing but arouse a lot of curiosity. People who knew me were quite surprised I wanted to work with kids. I also got particular attention from men. Some wondered why anyone would want to work with kids in the first place. Then there were those who were looking at the possibility of joining the Yin Yang Program themselves. Jesus died on the cross for our sins. I took the Yin Yang Program for Man!

Now I can say, gentlemen I found the answer to my question. I'm here to learn to communicate with the spirit of a child. You see, as spirit, a child is just as capable as you and I. The only difference is that, as adults, we have more life experience. That's a way of saying we tend to create situations where we are not allowed to have fun-commonly known as growing up. Children don't have that problem. To me there is nothing more capable on this planet than a child playing and having fun.

So after one year seven months and eight days I know what it is like to feel the sand between my toes.

I would like to thank the teachers of the Yin Yang Seminary, Revs. Natasha Lynn and Barbara Hipps; to my fellow students Revs. Roseanne Theeringer and Paul Siebert; the directors of the Yin Yang Seminary, the Rt. Rev. Susan Hull Bostwick and Rev. Mary Bell, (the one who said hello to me); to the Yin Yang children and their parents. Thank you for your support and amusement. And thank you, Lewis for having the guts to say "I'm a psychic and a healer" and reminding us that what we do, no one else on the planet does - being a psychic in a sandbox.

SEEING A SITUATION CLEARLY

Seer, Clairvoyant, Prophet, Visionary

These words have the ability to frighten many. Yet people in positions of power and authority can probably recall the times they have used psychic ability by acting upon their hunches. Psychic ability takes several forms: hearing things; seeing things; knowing things; feeling things. It sometimes uses the function of being able to see a situation clearly—clairvoyance—or perceive an outcome without a doubt—prophecy.

SEEING A SITUATION CLEARLY. How many people in the business world use this ability without thinking—whether it be solving personnel problems or evaluating a balance sheet? PERCEIVING THE OUTCOME WITHOUT A DOUBT. Joe Montana doesn't have a corner on the market here, but he has an uncanny ability to throw that football, make a direct hit and get the desired result—a touchdown.

These activities seem like such common everyday events in anyone's life. Can these righteously be labeled psychic experiences? Can you label any business owner a clairvoyant and any quarterback a prophet? The difference between successful quarterbacks and businessmen and anyone else is their use of these abilities. I think that the abilities to see clearly and predict events are ones that we are innately gifted with and programmed to use by our parents as survival tools. How would you ever have climbed the stairs the first time you tried if you weren't able to see clearly that you could accomplish such a feat? Your prediction that you would make it to the top and stand up, then throw your hands up in the air in triumph, would have been front page news—if only you had a vocabulary. Adults have a knack for expecting children to see situations clearly—such as what happens when you go head first down the hill in your little red wagon or later in life join up with a drug crazed peer group—and to predict the outcome. Yet, when these adult expectations get translated into psychic ability, fear strikes the homefront. Beware the offspring who takes the parent seriously and begins careful study of the ability to see clearly and predict the outcome. Often the seeker may discover the answer in the spirit world and not in the conventional realms of medicine, psychology, or the law.

The problem may be semantics. Psychic Life Magazine is dedicated to de-mystifying the "bad" words—those spiritual words that have been given such short shrift and summarily dismissed as denoting evil.

Prophet, prophetess, prophecy. There is little agreement scholastically or ecclesiastically (See the Bible) about the specific meaning—does a person speak the word of God, Jesus Christ, or their next door neighbor? Websters' makes it easy for us—someone who predicts. Unfortunately, utterances of past time prophets live on like the devastation of a volcano. It takes many years to repair the damage and thousands of generations to forget. How do we deal with the fear? The existence of fear means that we give the thing some credence. We may not like the thing itself—the prophet or the prophecy—but it sometimes does have an effect—it sometimes does have a way of being correct. Do we secretly wish someone would just tell us what lies ahead tomorrow, next week, in a year, in three years, when we are old and grey? I think that this is where the danger lies. We mistake spiritual communication for control.

The time to use clairvoyants and clairvoyance (develop your own abilities as a seer) is now. More than ever we need to see the situation clearly and be able to predict the outcome. As a psychic I don't like to leave all the prophecying to all the politicians and those in positions of power and authority who predict nuclear bomb factories are safe and our future rosy. It is time to educate ourselves and our children to use the innate abilities of the spirit—clairvoyance, clairaudience, healing, knowingness—and to develop them without fear.

This issue of Psychic Life Magazine is dedicated to seeing clearly. When are you using your clairvoyance? See Psychic Life Production Manager Darla Christiansen's story on Clairvoyance (page 16); The eyes are the mirrors of the soul—Iridology by psychic David Doyle (page 20); The Oracle of Delphi, a journey into the prophecies of the past with Seers Jacquelyn Smith and Charlene Hubbard (page 28); Why you wear glasses is explored as what energy you don't want to see by Clairvoyant Leigh Smith (page 27), and Dyslexia, a medically diagnosed non-problem that is a spiritual ability is explored by Cathy Langlois, a capable aura reader who had dyslexia (page 32).

Prophecy: The next five years will see a demystifying of psychic as a "bad" word as men and women of the media stop being "neutral" and seek the real truth—within themselves as psychics.

Past Life Prayer

My name is Steven Koehler and I am writing in regards to your "How to Pray" article in the Vol. 4, No. 4 issue of Psychic Life. The article was very good and I am interested in more information regarding past-life prayer. Incidentally, I thought that the issue on Egypt was very fascinating and very well done. Thanks for your help.

Healing and the Law

Re: Healing and the Law - "A Dastardly Crime" by Michael J. Tamura

I read this article with interest and as I got past the second paragraph, I realized what kind of impact the resolution of the illegality of psychic practices means. I was interested in the presentation of the situation, prevalence, etc., and then some sort of resolution — suggested action. But then the attacks started. The author started becoming grossly condemnatory toward those in government policy making and law enforcement. The bias was too much. Who, ultimately, will be the ones to execute the change? The ones in government policy/law making who the author refers to as "...the same sort of destructive, ignorant mentality which brought us brain lobotomies and electroshock therapy. ...Frustrated, they pass ordinances to restrict people's abilities."

I would like to see more information about this statutory situation in which practicing psychics can be arrested and prosecuted, however, I would like to see:

1) Less personal, subjective bias manifested in sarcastic, condemnatory and picayunish remarks: and

2) More information on what people can actually do to realize the desired change, i.e., legalization of psychic practice. (From meditation, phoning city superintendants, writing letters to the editors of local newspapers, community awareness/action, press releases to various publications, breakfast speeches, to anything else which will get it done and ourselves out of phony victim-like groaning, moaning and sputtering.

Please advise if there is some way I may be of assistance. I'm sure others would gladly move into action if asked. Yours for enlightened legislation,

Psychic Phone Call

Hello

I would like to relate my incredible introduction to the psychic world. One evening in a fit of despair and depression I decided to call an ex-Navy buddy in Alameda to cheer myself up. As it turned out, what I dialed was a cosmically correct number; not the number I intended, though.

What I got was a very amusing recording by a very happy and energetic sounding woman named Jan, who explained that she was out dancing and to leave my name and number. Her good energy was contagious, so I left a message saying that although she didn't know me, I would be pleased if she called me back, as I sensed her to be an interesting person. I hung up the phone and soon sank back into existential dismay, sure that she wouldn't call me back, way down here in Brisbee, Arizona.

To my surprise the phone rang about 20 minutes later--and it was Jan! She had found my message and was for some reason curious about me.

Jan and I talked for quite a while that night. We were both very amused at the prospect of our chance meeting and laughed a lot as we got to talking about our lives; hers as a Reverend in the Church of Divine Man, mine as a college student.

I explained that I had been depressed and restless lately and she told me about other people's energy being in my space and other psychically based phenomenon that might be part of my difficulties. She explained that if I couldn't solve a problem it wasn't my problem! Many of the ideas she told me were new and different, but they rang with truth, and freshness, and possibility.

We have written and talked to each other many times since then, and Jan has given much to me. Tools, such as grounding and meditation, and amusement about myself, and life, and energy. I am a slow learner, but she is a patient and beautiful spirit.

I am looking forward to coming up to the Bay Area to meet my friend, the Reverend, and to get a reading and a healing at the Berkeley Psychic Institute. This is a growth period I am looking forward to.

A Spiritual Problem

I was reading a recent issue of Psychic Life that contained a book review on The Minds of Billy Milligan. Because I am interested in books about "multiple personalities," or what the medical establishment diagnoses as "psychological" problems, I decided to read the book for myself.

The more I read of the book, the more angry I became. The "problem" that Billy Milligan suffers from is so blatantly obvious to any psychic—he is an out-of-control transmedium in need of a spiritual healing. It is upsetting to me to think about how many thousands of dollars were spent trying to prove that Billy had a severe psychological problem when in reality he was (and still is) experiencing a spiritual problem. He (as a being) does not know how to control the various beings coming in and out of his body. The psychiatrists and psychologists can claim success for having "cured" him, but all they have really succeeded in doing is teaching all the beings that use that body how to conform to their precepts of what is "normal" behavior. They have done nothing about teaching the original being in the body how to have his own space and kick the other beings out. These beings now controlling the body are having a great time running the psychiatrists and social workers around in circles.

Even the legal wizards were not sure what to do with him. They simply passed the problem over to the medical establishment. I wonder what their reaction would have been if a psychic healer had offered to give Billy a healing. I suspect they would have arrested him for practicing medicine without a license and then spent more of the state taxpayers' money trying to prove that psychic healing is not a bonafide religion.

Subscription Problem

I received my first subscription copy of Psychic Life recently (after long buying and reading it) and was honored to find my name listed in the "Spiritual Marketplace." However, I live in Oakland and practice here, not San Rafael, as listed. However, the next week I learned I would be co-leading a women's (psychic) support group in San Rafael, a place I'd never been before! funny. . .

My daughter received her gift subscription card, but no magazine as yet (ordered along with mine). If you could also list my name next issue as Ria Kubota, Oakland (415)569-5054, as well, I'd be grateful. Thanks!

Dear Beatriz

Just a note to say thanks for our discussion Wednesday.

I came home that day and tried to write down all the things we had talked about so I could remember them! You've really helped to reinforce some ideas about myself and gave new insight to our world in general.

Ask Sharon

by Sharon Santos

Dear Sharon,

I am still having problems regarding my spirit guides. Once in a while I will get one with a new name and face. Is this normal? How can I tell if they are my real spirit guides? Also, many times when I meditate, my body will begin to rock violently and I felt sick afterward. This discomfort will continue for up to 3 to 7 hours. Why?

Benson

Dear Benson,

Hello and congratulations on your ability to communicate with spirit. I don't think there is a normal way to communicate with spirit. We all have varied abilities as spirit, and as spirit sometimes we have agreements with other spirits to help us, but sometimes we make new ones and break the old ones.

I have one rule for my spirit guides: They must stay out of my space. As I look at you in a meditative space, I see that you are sometimes invaded by another spirit. This spirit raises the energy level of your body to accomodate it. This is not YOUR energy level, and can leave you feeling kind of sick and burned out. Caitlin Goodsell is a Psychic Life writer (pg. 38) who might help you. Or call the Psychic Hotline 415-459-3551.

Sharon

Dear Sharon,

I read in Psychic Life that sometimes spirits can cause people to have convulsions or to just stare blankly. My first question to you concerns my brother. Three years ago in November he had an accident and was in a coma for three days. Since then he has had numerous seizures ranging from staring blankly, to facial contortions, shaking and falling down. He loses consciousness every time and isn't aware of having had a seizure until he is told; also, he has terrible headaches afterwards. I should also mention that he is Christian and feels that God is in control of his life. He sees this as God's will. After reading the article I mentioned above, I am wondering if it could be spirit related? I don't know much about spirit, and haven't really thought about it. But my curiosity is aroused, I am interested in your response.

Also, can you tell me if there are spirits around me and if so, what can you tell me about them. Thank you very much for your thoughts and time devoted to these questions, especially the first one.

Amy C.

Hello Amy,

Yes, I see this as spirit related. In part, I see that your brother is trying to find a new way to be in his body, and to heal some of the injuries to his head that make the old way of communication with himself impossible at this time. I also see that there is another spirit that comes into his body and tries to control it. This is what makes his head hurt and his body contort and jerk. This other spirit's energy in his space also causes pain--when this foreign spirit energy goes, so does the pain. I would recommend a trance medium healing offered at the Berkeley Psychic Institute. You can call the Hotline at (415) 459-3551 for information on how to make an appointment.

When I look at you as spirit, I see that you have a guide that is trying to guide you toward clearer spiritual communication with your brother and help him heal himself. It seems to be a healing guide from a past life. Your communication with this spirit seems clear, she stays out of your space, and is enthusiastic about your interest in spirit.

Sharon

Dear Sharon,

First let me tell you that I enjoy reading your column in Psychic Life. I have just moved to the state of Nevada. Before that I lived in several small towns in California. I have started to learn about psychic energy, etc. I want to learn more, but it is financially impossible now. I look forward to taking classes in the future on these subjects. Could you send me information on the Berkeley Psychic Institute Clairvoyant Training Program?

Claire

Dear Claire,

There are a few graduates of the B.P.I. in Nevada that you can contact, and I am sending you some information on all of the classes that the B.P.I. offers. I hope you continue with your growth and awareness of spirit.

Psychic Questions & Answers

by Carol McCarthy

Q. How do you tell the difference between having a being in your space who has a body, from one who does not have a body?

A. Esentially no one else's energy belongs in your body but your own. So whether or not the entity (spirit, being) has a body doesn't really matter. As an example, your brother is spirit, and he also has a body - when his energy gets in your space you may want to clear that energy out. With him in your space, you may even start to feel like him. However, a being without a body might be a spirit you made agreements with between lifetimes. This energy in your space is also foreign energy and may disturb you in a variety of ways. If it doesn't feel good, it's not your energy. Your own energy in your own space is a healing to you and feels great!

Q. When you are at work is it good to be psychic all of the time?

A. You already are psychic all of the time. Psychic means soul essence, or who you are. Perhaps you are referring to using these abilities. I think we are always using our abilities, even if one of those abilities is to turn off another ability. When you work with numbers, you may not want to use your ability to see colors; and when you talk to your boss about business matters, you don't necessarily want to use your ability to read his aura and communicate about it. We use different abilities at different times. I call this "changing hats." Sometimes I have my business woman's hat on, or my wife hat. We all have many "hats" in our life, and making separations from what we do and who we are is sometimes very important.

Q. When I sit on the floor, it's easier to ground than when I sit on a chair. Sitting on a chair and grounding is harder for me to imagine. Why?

A. If you have meditated before from an Eastern practice, you may be in past time in your meditations. Because we live in the western world and we sit on chairs, we accommodate our lifestyle when we meditate by sitting in a chair with our feet on the floor. I would like to recommend postulating, or imagining, being in present-time; let go of old concepts, and release, or ground out this old energy. This will give you room to be in present time, and to enjoy grounding from this new and everchanging space.

(Note: This person later told me that she grounded not only herself, but her chair, too, and felt comfortable and was able to ground with no effort.)

Q. When I go out in public with my son, I feel a lot of hatred go toward him from others. It makes me feel very protective of him. Is there a way I can cope with this negativity?

A. You and your son don't have a problem. What you are experiencing is someone else's problem. Sometimes energy is put between people, and when you look at that other person (your son) all you see are problems (or foreign energy), and then you try to solve it. When the problem is not yours, you can't solve it - it's a rule of thumb.

One way to handle this energy is to sit down at home, and imagine yourself in a bubble. You may want to close your eyes, relax and take a deep breath; then imagine your son in his own bubble. The next step is to create a line from your bubble to his, and color it gold. That represents your son's and your communication with each other. This is a simple way to use a mechanical technique to say to other people, "This is my space, and your energy doesn't belong here." ☆

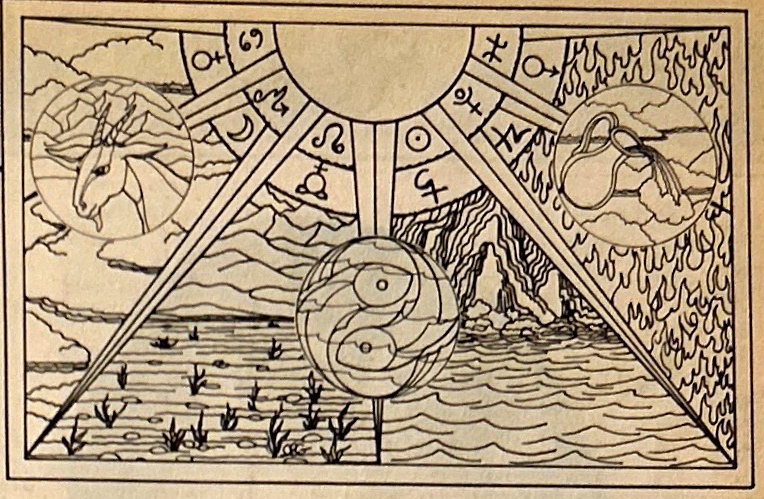
Astrological Forecast

by Dr. Robert Crow

January & February



Congratulations! You are about to embark on the most exciting journey of your life. 1985 holds the promise of meeting all your expectations and going you one better.

NOW YOU CAN REACH YOUR FULL POTENTIAL. You will be surprised to find that it is much greater than you ever suspected it could be.

However, you will accomplish nothing whatsoever, unless you first make up your mind to do something. The only way to succeed is to TRY. 1985 will be a year of great changes, new trends and accomplishments.

Mars and Venus will be in Pisces during January. This will make your emotions more sensitive (Venus) and stronger (Mars). This emotional energy needs a creative outlet or it may become rash and unruly.

The last few years have seen some of the greatest companies in the history of modern business file for bankruptcy, or receive help from the government to stay in business. The miracle of the eighties is that failure does not mean ruin or disgrace. It simply indicates the methods you have been using will not succeed; therefore, some other method is called for. It is considered a learning process. Every successful person has experienced many failures on the road to success.

Those who have failed have also TRIED. That speaks very well for them. It also means they have learned. It has been discovered that those who succeed TRY, AND KEEP ON TRYING.

The planetary influences that will occur during 1985 will support new effort. Old methods will be abandoned in favor of new and different techniques. Original thinking will pay off now as never before. There are always new ways of doing things and new uses for old things. The only thing that seems to be impossible is to succeed without trying.

That does not mean that success can't be easy to discover, find or reach. For many of you, success will seem to fall all over you the minute you start to try. For some, it will come so easy, you may kick yourself for not trying it a long time ago. For others, it will take hard work. Just remember that real satisfaction and hard work go hand in hand.

If you should try and fail, remember that failure is just an awkward rung on the ladder to success. It shouldn't be the end of your effort to succeed. Failure indicates you need to analyze your methods and make corrections before TRYING AGAIN.

Keep your goal in your mind's eye and go after it with ENTHUSIASM. Never look down when you are on your way up. Keep the top in sight at all times. Anticipate the reward waiting for you at the top or destination. Settle for nothing but that which you want. Imagine how it will feel when you succeed as you try. Anticipate the glory of winning. Remember failure builds the character sometimes needed to reach an even greater success and carries you closer to it.

There will be too much energy pushing and pulling at you from Mars at various times during the year. You must get proper rest or you may get discouraged. Don't let fatigue ruin your ENTHUSIASM or cause discouragement. Proper rest is as important as hard work. Just keep in mind: it is almost as much fun to dream about your goal as it is to work toward it. When you can't do one, you can do the other.

This could be the best year of your life. Many influences are in your favor for the first time, and they are stronger than they will ever be again. ☆

Where Do You Find Out About Healing and the Law

by Michael J. Tamura

Vol. 1 No. 2 State Witch-hunts, Healers, and Psychics

Rev. Tamura lays the groundwork for a series of articles on how the medical establishment has attempted to restrict the practice of alternative methods of healing. The California BMQA (Board of Medical Quality Assurance) has exhibited a growing interest in studying healers so that it can initiate a licensing procedure for the work that healers do. Several court cases over the years have cost practicing healers a great deal in legal fees, without presenting any substantial evidence of causing anyone harm. The "witch-hunt scare tactics" are not only aimed at individuals but also organized churches, as well.

Vol. 1 No. 3 The M.D.—Healer or Dealer?

Modern medicine claims Hippocrates as its father, but it seems to have strayed from his original philosophy. Hippocrates was a firm believer in maintaining a "proper regimen" for healing oneself. There was very little, if any, reliance on the use of drugs.

Today, the pharmaceutical industry is a multibillion dollar business that relies almost totally on the medical community to push its products. While many worthwhile advances in medicine have been made over the years, the use of drugs to control people's lives has also increased. It is no accident that drug manufacturers are a major supporter of the AMA, its journals, and its lobbying efforts.

Vol. 1 No. 4 Healers: Givers not Frauds

Healers are abundant and, because they are givers too, are susceptible to being taken advantage of by agents of the state posing as people in need. It is ironic that the AMA and the BMQA are accusing healers of being frauds, when they are the ones who are defrauding bonafide healers in an attempt to gather evidence against them. Most healers are particularly vulnerable because they enjoy giving and are not out to take advantage of anyone.

Vol. 1 No. 6 Midwives as Outlaws

Midwives are also healers and accepted as such all over the world--but not in the U. S. Evidence indicates that, in fact, mortality is less in childbirths attended by midwives, but the medical community still insists on persecuting them for "practicing medicine without a license." Many successful midwives have assisted with thousands of childbirths, but still do not pass the AMA/BMQA standards because they lack a medical school degree. The only apparent reason that the medical establishment considers midwifery a crime is that it breaks up their money game. Under the guise of the public's best interest, they purport to protect them from what is documented to be a safer form of healing and care than the doctors provide.

Vol. 2 No. 1 Nurse-Midwife Saves Baby's Life: Doctors Reprimand Her

Carol is a board certified nurse-midwife, licensed through the American College of Nurse-Midwives. She is also a minister in the Church of Divine Man. While attending a hospital birth (without a physician present), she was confronted with a situation requiring her to act using her best judgment. The infant's life was in danger, but her quick thinking (and her ability to look clairvoyantly at the energy around the infant) enabled her to save the infant's life. Despite the fact that she saved the baby, she was reprimanded and threatened with having her license revoked.

Vol. 2 No. 2 Congress Shall Make No Law...

Our forefathers who wrote the United States Constitution, having experienced religious persecution in the form of government control, designed a nation that would ensure a basic, God-given right to spiritual freedom. Being a healer is a form of spiritual freedom available to all of us. It is in danger, however, of being judged by laws that were designed to govern the treating of physical ills and not those of the spirit. Healers who attempt to deal with the medical inquisition in terms of health and safety regulations only deny their right to practice their own religion--a right guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution.

Vol. 2 No. 3 Costly Drugs and Tests Are Doctors' Cures for Kundalini Hot Flashes, Rashes, and Insomnia

The running of kundalini energy in the body has often been misdiagnosed by doctors as heart trouble and various other maladies--simply because they look only at the physical symptoms and not at what is happening to the body on an energy level. Learning to control this tremendous body healing energy is something that can be taught. However, the medical field's approach is to control it with various drugs or an endless series of tests. It is the doctors who are practicing wrongfully when they try to solve a spiritual problem with drugs.

Vol. 2 No. 4 You May Be Psychic Not Crazy

The world is full of many very capable transmediums. There are, however, many transmediums who are essentially out of control as a spirit. That is, they have no control over the energy coming in and out of their body. The medical profession's remedy for these out-of-control psychics is to control them with drugs and lock them away in institutions. Once again, the doctors are attempting to cure a spiritual problem (for which they have no experience) with physical constraints. Treatments created by the medical profession actually prevent a spirit from learning how to heal itself.

Vol. 2 No. 5 A Knight in Modern-Day Body

There are people who could benefit from the combined resources of the psychic, nutritional, and medical fields. Such a being once spent some time taking classes at BPI, but he spent most of his time dressing and acting the part of a knight of old, complete with cape and saber. He was "stuck" in a past life and could not get out of it. He was taken to a mental hospital because he became violent, but all the doctors did was sedate him and then release him to roam the streets. If the medical profession was willing to work--and not try to control--psychics, perhaps similar beings could be helped into present time.

Vol. 2 No. 6 Accusing the Givers—Is There Really Freedom of Religion?

One of the traps that a lot of healers fall into is trying to communicate (or translate) what they do in legal, medical, or psychological terms. Since laws are specifically written for each of these areas, it is to the healers' advantage to keep spiritual communication in its own context. The AMA has its own language as does the IRS and the legal profession. Trying to defend yourself in their terms places you under their control. But by practicing your religious freedom and realizing that you do not have to be categorized by the state, you can communicate in your own language under the full protection of the Constitution.

Vol. 3 No. 1 "LAW:" How Did It All Start?

The Law has been changed many times over the years. In the beginning was God's law, which was interpreted by psychics and healers. It was changed into common law through organized religious groups, and later into statutory or legislative law by government trying to regulate the church. The Word of God--our original Law--has been changed so many times that it is almost unrecognizable in its present form. Our Constitution was an attempt by the founders of this country to bring Law back to God, but even it has been severely misused. It is amusing that laws were created as a way of healing all those who got out of communication with God. Now it actually works to prevent communication.

Vol. 3 No. 2 Your Soul is in Violation of the Zoning Ordinance

There are many governmental, human service, academic, scientific, and even religious groups who do not like the use of the word "psychic" and "healer" in connection with "churches" and "religion." If the art of healing could be confined to the medical and psychological professions, and taught only in an academic environment, then it could be controlled much more easily. But, because spiritual healing is a right that each individual is guaranteed by the Constitution, the "healing arts" cannot legally be controlled or restricted by non-believers.

Vol. 3 No. 3 Your Soul is in Violation of the Zoning Ordinance (Part 2)

Our Constitution was written to guarantee our rights to religious freedom. It has, however, evolved into a motley conglomeration of agencies, boards, commissions and associations which, in practice, deny the very rights they were initially formed to defend. They have tried to regulate where people can pray and have churches by decree of zoning commissions. (It is amusing that government agencies are trying to define what constitutes a "legal" church when Jesus has already said that "where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

Vol. 3 No. 4 They Can't Make You Prove It

A Supreme Court justice wrote a majority legal opinion in 1943, which clearly defines individuals' rights to believe what they wish even if they cannot prove it, especially with regard to religious doctrines and beliefs. This particular case (U.S. vs. Ballard) is especially important for psychics and healers. It may well be the first case of a psychic healer who defended his work as part of religious freedom. It also serves as a reminder to religious sects who attempt to invalidate other religious entities simply because their beliefs are different; if one is required to prove his beliefs, then all could be required to do it.

Vol. 3 No. 5/6 Healers Need No License To Practice Their Spiritual Ideas Whether They Be Psychic, Midwife, Herbologist or Masseuse

There are those in state government who believe that the only way to protect religious freedom is to license it and regulate it as a healing art under the medical profession. The really bad part of this is that there are healers who believe this lie and are placing themselves in competition with God by denying their own abilities. They fail to realize that having a Constitution which guarantees religious freedon is all the "regulation" we need.

Vol. 4 No. 1 The Bad Words

The media in this country has a habit of defining words for us when they don't even know what the words mean. The media and different state agencies attempt to define what a church is, based on their perceptions of what they can legally regulate. They seem to forget that Jesus has already given us a definition of a church, which is quite clear to any psychic (Mathew 18:18-20).

Vol. 4 No. 2 Constitutional Sanctuary

The Constitution is often misinterpreted by atheists who fail to realize that the church is a separate state unto itself and can, therefore, provide sanctuary from governmental harassment. The Constitution was formed to keep the state out of the churches' business. But now it is being used to try and regulate the church and deny its members the God-given right to sanctuary from religious persecution. The church has no desire to be in the business of running the state. Bureaucrats seem to forget that the spirit has no political affiliations or restrictions.

Vol. 4 No. 3 KUNDALINI ENERGY - Not a Medical Problem

Reprint from Vol. 2 No. 3

Vol. 4 No. 4 What If.....

As a psychic, you can look at any of the games on the planet. Some of them are played on a much larger scale than most people even imagine. Most people will only see those in their immediate vicinity as getting in the way of their psychic freedom. Probably very few are aware of the power games played under the pretext of being for the good of this country. These have a great effect on our spiritual freedom -- those who control money and power only seem to want more. Unfortunately for them, psychics get in the way.

Vol. 4 No. 5 "A Dastardly Crime"

Many city ordinances consider practicing your religion a crime, especially if it has anything to do with being clairvoyant. Under the guise of protecting the public at large, they pass laws to restrict your abilities and the right to practice the religion of your choice. These municipal ordinances violate not only the state and national constitution, but also God's law. God gave us the ability to be clairvoyant. What rights do the city governments have to say that we, as psychics, cannot earn a living or practice that ability? Maybe they can't figure out any other way to regulate what they fear.

Vol. 4 No. 6 Laws Belong to Caesar, Healers Belong to God

Although knowing and understanding the laws which regulate us does not have much to do with our becoming capable psychics, it is important for our own well-being that we do understand them. The creators and enforcers of laws are among the greatest destroyers of psychics and healers. If we allow them to regulate churches and our ability to give spiritual counseling, then we are denying our own rights, which were given to us by God in the first place. ☆

HISTORICAL PSYCHICS

Nostradamus Psychic and HEALER

by Michelle Maveety

Nostradamus is probably one of the most widely read and most controversial psychics in history. He is best known for his book of prophecies, which he said goes through the year 3797. He was also a tremendous healer.

Michel Nostradamus received a degree in medicine from the University of Montpelier in France in 1525. He soon began to develop a reputation for being able to cure the incurable. As his reputation as a healer grew, more and more plague stricken towns would send for him. Nostradamus treated thousands of plague victims, but never became ill himself. Some of his peers attributed this to his self-confidence and bravery. When I look at Nostradamus clairvoyantly I see someone full of certainty; someone who owns his own space, who doesn't have to match energy with the ill to heal them and who does not take on their problems. I see him as a very capable psychic and healer who is able to look at the ill from a neutral space and use his psychic abilities to get healing information. He uses his knowingness and precognition. Nostradamus prescribed treatment and made medicines for his patients from these levels. His beliefs and treatments were considered unorthodox by his peers; nevertheless, he successfully healed many, many people using these unorthodox methods.

Nostradamus didn't believe in bleeding - a popular practice until the late 1800's. He believed that "much pestilence was carried in the air." This was long before Louis Pasteur wrote about his discovery of germs in 1858. Nostradamus was probably most contoversial because he made his own medicines (something done primarily by alchemists) that seemed to work although none of his peers understood why they did.

Unfortunately, there are very few records left from this period of Nostradamus' life. References are vague; they simply say "he made a medicine". The only recorded medicine this writer's research uncovered was a "Rose Pill", used to treat the black plague.

"Take of the distillation of the branch of the greenest cypress-wood, one ounce; of iris of Florence, 6 ounces; of cloves, 3 ounces; of sweet flag, 3 drams; of ligni aloes, 6 drams.

Reduce to a mixture not overly evaporated. Then take of blood red roses 200 to 300 completely fresh and gathered before dawn. Pound these throughly; then blend them with the mixture.

When the whole has been mingled, make into small packs, like troches, and set them to dry in the shade."

Nostradamus also was a soul that was capable of much amusement. An old saying quotes, "A prophet is never honored in his own land." Truly France didn't know about his tremendous reputation until people visiting France started requesting to see his grave. When they dug up his coffin to move it to a larger city, he shocked them again. On his chest was a sign: Michel De Nostradamus, Born December 14, 1503. Died July 2, 1566. Exhumed November 6, 1791. It was.

Nostradamus was a tremendously capable healer. If you're a healer who wants to heal the universe; if you feel like warmed-over death after talking to someone and they feel great; if you've ever been called weird, different or unorthodox, it might be fun to take a look at Nostradamus on your own. He's a tremendous book for a clairvoyant to read. ☆

The Year of CONSERVATISM

by Robert Cole

1985 will be a solid year of conservatism.

Historians define "conservatism" as a philosophy of self-denial for the common good. Whereas liberals are committed to the liberation of the individual, conservatives are committed to the preservation of society.

In these terms, 1985 will be extremely conservative.

From the astrological perspective, history is recorded in cycles that coincide with the motions of the planets. Since the 18th century, astrologers have been able to calculate the motions of Uranus. In the 19th century, they began tracing Neptune's cycles. And in our 20th century, they discovered the eccentric patterns of distant Pluto. These transpersonal planetary cycles are believed to coincide with the mysterious movements of mass psychology.

The last time that Pluto was in the first few degrees of Scorpio was 1738. Pluto is believed to coincide with the cycles of global development, i.e., what changes are ocurring in the collective consciousness of the human species. Fortunately, the history books provide us with a concise definition for this uniquely coincidental period in time--the age of absolutism.

The history books are shy on information about this period in other cultures; nevertheless, it can be assumed that this European form of politics was visible around the world during this time of colonial imperialism.

Absolutism is an extremely conservative term. It came into vogue from 1730-1740 after both England and France experienced economic scandals which shook the rest of the world. Absolutism was a return to the time-tested power structures of the age of monarchy. It has survived in our records as a philosophy of recovery.

By 1738, Absolutism reached its greatest height as the armies of Europe showed their strength extravagantly. "Great powers dictated terms dividing spoils and prestige at the expense of smaller states. But the cost, technology and tactics of these armies served to deter the horror of warfare. Rarely was the annihilation of the opposing force the strategic objective of a battle. The victor never sought unconditional surrender."

In Prussia, Frederick Wilhelm I ran a government of all business and no pleasure. He cut government expenses to the core in order to build the military power of his state. In Austria, a pious woman named Maria Teresa was hard at work re-establishing a religiously conservative government. France was being ruled by Cardinal Fluery, whose staunch absolutism produced exceptional harvests and significantly increased commercial activity. In England, John Walpole, the minister of finance, was infused with a great vision of Britain's imperial destiny. Walpole is credited with these two slogans: "Every man has his price" and "Let sleeping dogs lie." In all the nations of Europe, the exploitation of the new colonies and the invention of new spinning and weaving technologies gradually fueled the fires for the Industrial Revolution. Slavery became such a profitable enterprise that it eventually caused the Seven Years War. Absolutism provided temporary security by returning to the previous structures.

Even though absolutism was a political expression of the 18th century, as Pluto again re-enters this precise place in the heavens, the global tendency is towards frugality, loyalty, and the time-proven methods of the past, i.e., placing the power of the human race in the hands of the few, the monarchs. Apparently, the fear that humanity experiences as it prepares for renaissance is easily assuaged by those who position themselves as demagogues and guarantee a return to peace and prosperity under the old ways. Military and religious dictators even now have taken absolute power into their own hands, promising to preserve their authority for the benefit of all.

Fortunately history guarantees a revolution, a renaissance to follow on the heels of this era of absolutism. Out of the rigid conservatism of the 1730s came the age of enlightenment and the start of the American, French, and Industrial revolutions. If history does guide us with its cyclicality, by the end of the 1980s the world should be ready to burst with an incredible social, political, artistic and scientific transformation.

Neptune was last in the first few degrees of Capricorn in the year 1821. Astrologers believe that Neptune's 165-year cycle coincides with cycles of nationalism here on earth. Theoretically, we should be able to draw some comparisons between 1821 and 1985. It's eerie to see the remarkable similarities between these two time-zones.

In 1821, the ruling majority in Greece slaughtered a group of Ottoman Turks, who retaliated by assassinating the Greek patriarch. Massacres and revolution ensued for ten years. How startling the similarity to the present situation in India!

...by the end of the 1980's the world should be ready to burst with an incredible social, political, artistic, and scientific transformation.

In 1821, there were revolutions in Mexico, Peru, and Guatemala as the people of Central America struggled to free themselves from their foreign oppressors in Europe. Revolution in the colonies abroad created a fear in the governments at home. As we move toward 1985, the context seems ominously familiar. Central America is dispersing and transforming its politics contrary to the ideals of the foreign superpowers. Tensions in Central America are creating reactionary fears in the industrialized nations. Linked together with the revolutions in the Mideast, the rise of the Third World countries in the Western Hemisphere truly jeopardizes invested governments in even larger dimensions than in 1821. The result? Extraordinary social repression on the homefront.

In 1821, the biggest name in the halls of established power around the world was the name of Austrian Prince Klemens Wenzl Nepomuk Lothar von Metternich. His aristocratic friends referred to him simply as Metternich, "the savior of civilization." Metternich issued the Carlsbad Decrees, which punished social activists under pretenses of terrorism; and he ruled not only Austria but had great influence among all the nations of the world. Metternich's charisma was fired by a passion for order; he deeply professed a belief in the establishment of order, even though others may have perceived it as an enforcement of order. The pitiful revolutions that were attempted in Italy during 1821 became proof of Metternich's conservative belief that "talk about individual rights is dangerous abstraction." Metternich saw himself as trimming down and reinforcing the centralized bureaucracies under a Christian ethic. "Christian fear restrains selfish nature. Without it society would dissolve into revolution and anarchy." How strange it seems that Ronald Reagan should be acting out the same role in history as Metternich!

History comes again to the rescue by pointing out in the ensuing years that rigid governments show the inadequacy of loose romantic conspiracies. In times such as these, social change is brought about more easily by radical nationalism and patriotic tradition. Those in government who promote social repression end up separating themselves from the ideals of their nation. These same ideals are held close to the hearts of those who feel oppression. Governments may be able to suppress loose romantic conspiracies, but this eventually creates powerful national movements over which governments have little control.

In astrological theory, the orbiting patterns of Uranus coincide with the cycles of social trends here on earth. Having considered Pluto's global influences and Neptune's international influences, studying Uranus' impact on trends of fashion will complete this analysis of 1985.

"Christian fear restrains selfish nature. Without it society would dissolve into revolution and anarchy."-Metternich

1902 was the last time Uranus transited through the heavens in the same place as it is in 1985. At the beginning of 1900, the U.S. and the rest of the world were celebrating the election of William McKinley to his second term in office. This staunch Republican had the backing of the industrial giants of the world, all of whom were supremely threatened by the workers' revolutions, which were exploding in every industrialized nation. In his first term he had mopped up the disaster of the Cleveland administration and had promised the rest of the world that he would protect the institutions of government at any cost. When he started his second term, in 1901, McKinley was riding on a wave of nationalism and patriotic fervor. Henry James, Somerset Maugham, Joseph Conrad, and Arthur Conan Doyle were all the rage. Caruso's first record was at the top of every girl's wish list. Pepsi-Cola was patented as the first of many fast-foods flooding the markets. Favorite songs were "In the Good Ol' Summer Time", "Bill Bailey, Won't You Come Home?", "In the Sweet Bye and Bye", and "Under the Bamboo Tree". The euphoria of industrialized luxury made Cartiers, Tiffany's, Saks, and J. C. Penney's spectacularly popular.

The social habits of the rich and famous were even more frivolous in contrast to the poverty and rebellion that was surfacing all over the world. Portugal and Venezuela went bankrupt and refused to pay their debts; they were blockaded. The Boer War was brought to a bloody end; and the white supremists ensconced themselves in power. The squeeze was put on Cuba until Spain could no longer support her colony. Workers' rebellions were squashed with martial law.

In September of 1901, McKinley was assassinated by a radical poor-people's conspiracy. His vice-president, Theodore Roosevelt, was sworn into office. Teddy brought roughriding into fashion. His best friends called him "that damned cowboy." Teddy took advantage of the moment and jumped on his high horse as the great champion of the small guy. He successfully fought the monopolization of capital and took responsibility for breaking the businessmen's stranglehold on the world economy. The Roosevelt-style took America by storm. Kids even named their stuffed animals Teddy Bears.

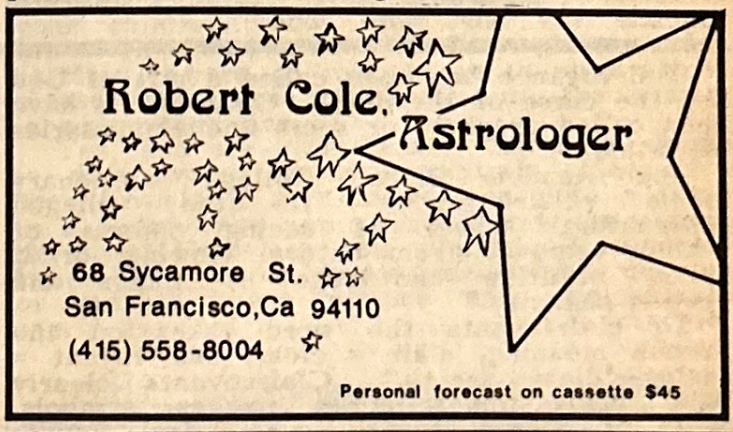
1902 cannot be forgotten as the first big year for the automobile. Several new makes were introduced to the popular marketplace, and even though they were still extremely expensive, they became symbols of status and much desired by every consumer.

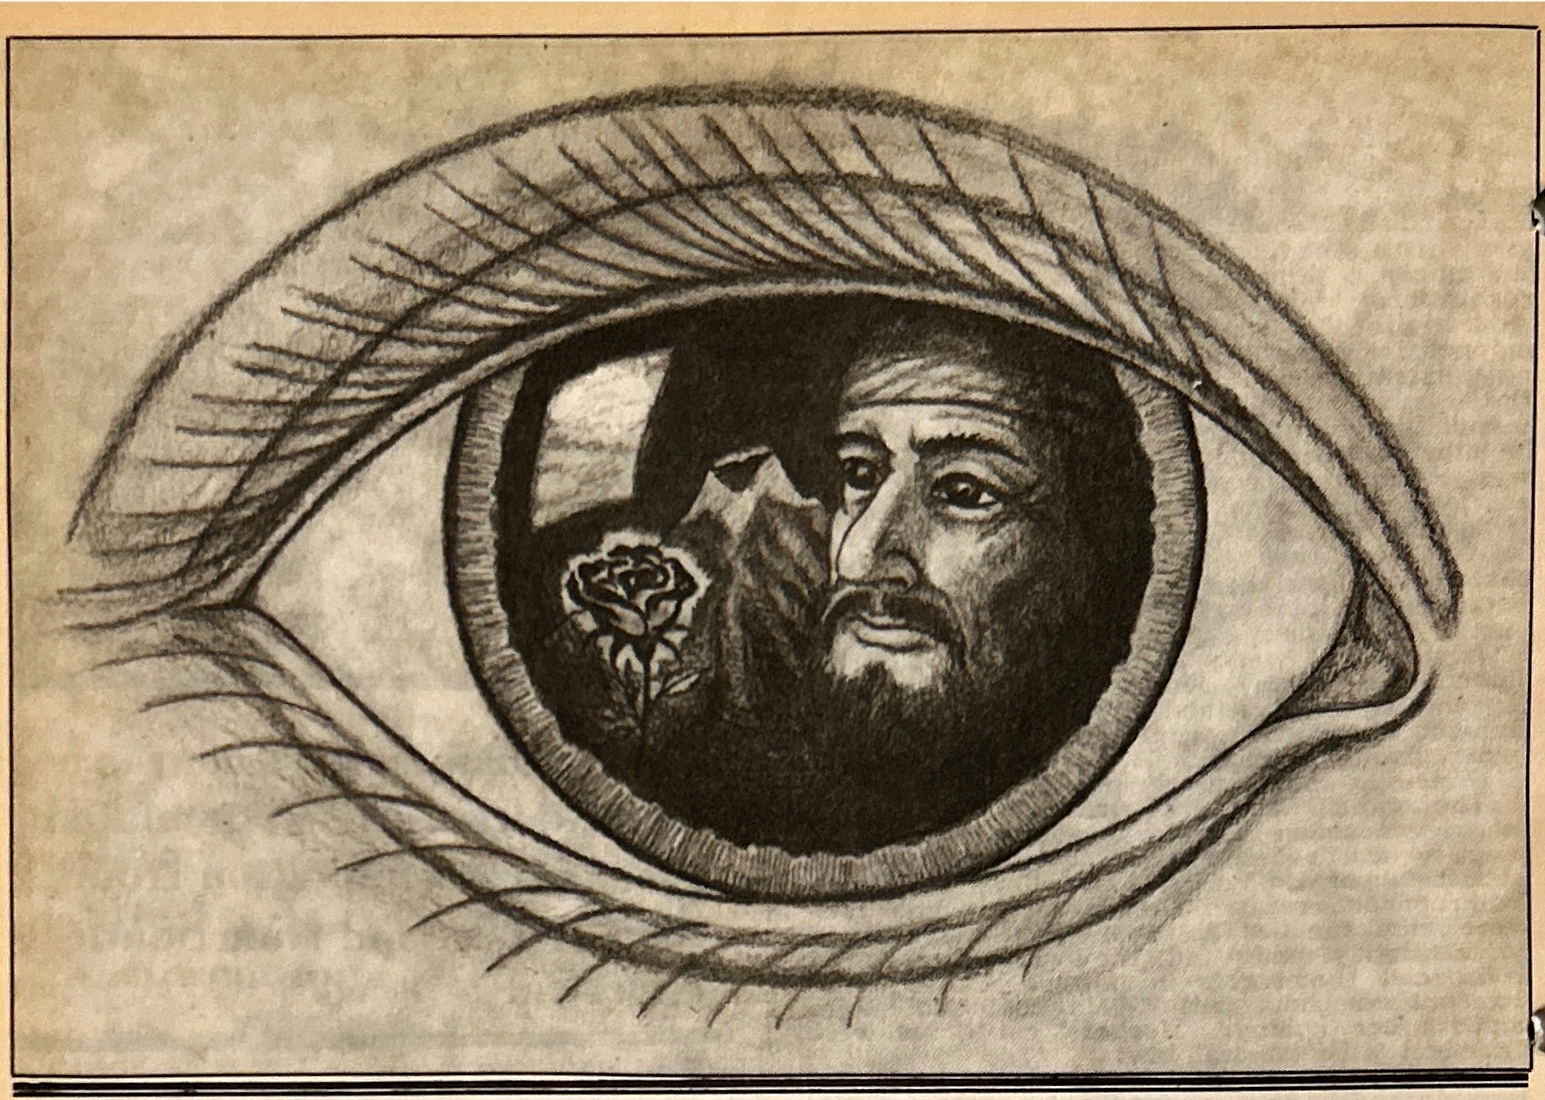
Finally, it is crucial to recognize the impact of immigration on the social trends of this time. During this period more people emigrated to America than ever before in history. They brought with them cultural ceremonies and rituals totally foreign to the waspish autocracy in America. As history repeats itself, we find ourselves today in a cultural revolution stimulated by massive immigration from the Far East and from South America. Even today we cannot refuse to accept this transfusion, for with it comes the new beginning.

...we find ourselves today in a cultural revolution stimulated by massive immigration from the Far East and from South America.

The interpersonal planetary cycles are believed to coincide with the mysterious movements of mass psychology.

From this glimpse into our historical past, we cannot help but prepare for a solid year of conservatism in 1985. From our astrological viewpoint, however, we can attempt to proceed through this moment in time with more compassion and less suffering than before. If we can do that, then our potential as human beings has been fulfilled.





CLAIRVOYANCE
From the Eyes of a Psychic

by Darla Christiansen

Clairvoyance has been called a gift of God and the curse of the devil. Clairvoyants have been called prophets or seers and emmissaries of Satan.

The Random House College Dictionary labels clairvoyance "1. the alleged supernatural power of seeing objects or actions removed from natural viewing; or 2. quick, intuitive knowledge of things and people; sagacity."

To clairvoyants the word takes on the French meaning, clair = clear, and voyant = seeing--"clear seeing." Clairvoyants clearly "see" many things: auras, images, symbols, spots of energy, spirits, geometrical figures and shapes. There are as many ways of seeing clairvoyantly as there are clairvoyants. This is because clairvoyants see through their own experiences.

On a Bay Area talk show recently a well known psychic, Sylvia Brown, said the seeing of auras was "mystical poppycock." Obviously Sylvia Brown is not an aura reader. This is not to say Sylvia Brown is not a gifted psychic. She is. But she does not see auras. She sees in her own way.

As a teacher of clairvoyance, I've had the opportunity to observe the many ways that people see. The reader who knows astrology will often see astrological symbols because they have meaning to him. A reader with a mathematics background may see formulas that hold meaning for him. Other clairvoyants get information from mental image pictures or geometric symbols. Scholars have researched the relationships between math/color/music. One clairvoyant I know sees people and things through music. It's a beautiful experience to have your aura played on the piano.

All of this makes clairvoyance seem very mystical--available only to those with special powers. I find this very amusing because I know that everyone is psychic. And, in fact, I know that almost everyone is already using psychic abilities without even acknowledging what they are.

Our society permits us to use our clairvoyance in many ways. We are, unfortunately, not allowed to call a spade, a spade - or clairvoyance, clairvoyance. But we do use this ability as we drive our cars, seeing the best ways to maneuver to avoid accidents. Designers "see" the effect of different elements they want to put together to create a feeling. Mechanics may "see" the problem in a car so they know where to start to take it apart. Accountants may "see" something wrong with some bookkeeping before doing the calculating to verify it.

"Prove It" is the greatest invalidator of psychics and their abilities.

Women are allowed to have some female intuition. Some people even have some permission to play on their hunches. Many of these people would deny there is such a thing as clairvoyance or being psychic. Yet our language is filled with phrases that indicate we do use our clairvoyance. "I see what you mean." "He was green with envy." "The woman had an inner glow, she must be in love."

Clairvoyance is a spiritual ability. This is why Random House and intellectuals have problems recognizing psychic abilities. Intellectualizing creates many problems even for psychics. Intellectualizing creates effort.

As a college student, living with five other women in a college apartment, I experienced what intellectualizing does to psychic abilities.

Most weekday evenings we wrapped ourselves in warm robes and buried ourselves in books. After several months my roommates noticed that, although I was usually the first to put on comfortable clothing, there were nights I remained dressed; inevitably these were the nights a group of our male friends would drop by to take us for pizza or a party somewhere on campus. I was always prepared to go on these spur-of-the-moment jaunts. Finally my roommates decided I was psychic and I should predict these party evenings. Of course, I turned on my analyzer and was wrong every evening. My friends gave up; why did they ever think I was psychic?

Perhaps you have had a similar experience. Have you ever invalidated your ability when it was put to the "test"? This game is called "Prove It" and it is the greatest invalidator of psychics and their abilities.

Clairvoyance is using the sixth chakra or energy center sometimes called the third eye. This is located in the center of the head. For a clairvoyant, this is the best place from which to read. This simply means having your attention right behind your eyes. From this chakra you can read in neutral. In neutral there are no judgements about what is happening to or being done by the readee.

From the sixth chakra a clairvoyant can also use the seventh chakra ability, knowingness. to decipher the pictures or mental image concepts, colors, or symbols he sees. From the sixth chakra a clairvoyant can use the fifth chakra ability, clairaudience or clear hearing, to communicate spirit-to-spirit to the readee and/or his spirit guides.

It is possible to use your other psychic abilities in conjunction with the first, second, third and fourth chakras also. I find, however, I often lose my ability to recognize the differences between the readee and myself when I fall into the lower chakras.

Clairvoyance is an ability we are all born with. Children are often amazing in their awareness of their clairvoyant ability. Recently a friend of mine was visiting Yin Yang Seminary for Psychic Children, a seminary where psychic abilities are encouraged and developed. He found he was waiting anxiously for lunch time; he had missed his breakfast and was very hungry. As the children began getting out their lunches, one little girl reached in her lunch sack and, without saying a word, handed him a sandwich. She had been acutely aware of his hunger pictures the whole morning.

Clairvoyance is a spiritual ability

Adults are often frightened by the abilities of their children. How disarming to discover your children know what you are thinking especially if you are feeling guilty. And children, aware of this, begin to shut off to please their parents and fit into the society in which they live.

Yes, you are clairvoyant. It's very simple — not strange or supernatural. Have you shut down this gift inherent in you, a spirit in a body? Are you aware of the times it is permissable to use this ability. How many times have you suddenly understood a concept or mental image picture and said "Oh, I see."? ☆

Lewis Speaks

Clairvoyants See the Truth

by Rev. Lewis S. Bostwick

Good day everyone. Clairvoyance is probably the second greatest perpetrator of human misery. Many problems arise in the United States because of the first amendment, Freedom of Religion. Consequently every priest, pastor, rabbi and Moslem mullah puts a protective circle around their followers. The dire threat of no verbal communication--we won't talk to you anymore, we won't love you anymore and you're guilty if you know, look, read or talk to anybody else who is in another religion.

Consequently all the so-called psychic words are tabu in our society. Oh yes, I forgot to include the universities, atheists, mad-men, fools and scientists who now use magicians to conjure up tricks to prove what we psychics do is a fake. (You know I read about all these scientific people in the Bible. History really repeats itself.)

We use our creative abilities and experience clairvoyant ability almost every day and every moment of our waking hours. This is like being in the middle of the forest and you can't see because of the trees.

Many strange things happen: why did I tell that lie the other day? I had one of my older graduates and his new lady come to see me. I felt a very amusing urge to lie about a very simple thing—my age. And when I did this I was matching the energy of my two guests because I was very aware that there was a lie between them and myself.

This happens to me many, many times. Instead of the person I'm communicating with speaking the lie, I would say it instead. What was happening? Well, it's really very simple. My guide stands right outside of my aura plugged into my 5th chakra (throat) giving me the information that there is a lie out there.

It took me until I was twelve years of age to know how to handle this kind of communication. One day I was sitting in church watching the aura and the guides of the pastor when all of a sudden his aura shimmered. I realized that every time I told something that was not true to me I could feel my aura shimmering. The man who was giving the sermon did not believe in spirit. I was totally devastated and stopped going to that church.

I then discovered a very peculiar relationship between my mother, step-father and I. I had to use nicer words then she used. It's called slanting the truth—she told me one thing and my dad told me another to keep what she thought was the peace in the family. The only difference was neither my dad nor my mother knew who was lying to who, but I did. So for the next thirty years I watched this tremendous phenomenon of an energy force plugging into mothers and their children, each playing the game of lying. I watched the more amusing game of entangling the family into lying situation which totally devastated and broke up the family unit.

The first thing I do is break up all the lies. I destroy all the lies of the people who influence that person through the 5th chakra (throat).

I have wandered through different psychic groups for 24 years from 1948-1972. Then the circus of psychics I have been accused of running came into being. I get labeled a medicine show with training hoops because I do spiritual healing in a group.

In training beginning levels of spiritual creativity, the clairvoyant ability is usually covered over by the energy of the five senses of the body. It's kind of amusing to watch spirit create in a body and the body expressing that creativity in everything it invents as an extension of itself--the body.

So to start to be able to use one's clairvoyant ability you have to teach the person to recognize energy. The energy of the beings that plug into the second chakra are of a different vibratory rate than the beings and the energy of the sixth chakra where we perceive in picture form. All the chakras vibrate on different levels.

People go to different psychics, ask the same question and get different answers because of the different vibratory rates of the chakras. I have observed that the gypsies read their from the third chakra. Clairvoyant readers who can't handle their sex life read from the second chakra. Past life readers read from the first chakra. And one of the greatest abilities that comes into use when these are all made known to the trainee is the seventh chakra or knowingness.

Sometimes this knowingness turns on to a person who is not aware of the other abilities and he starts to tell the future. But a very amusing thing happens to people who start to tell the future. After awhile they go into boredom and then stop creating and lose their ability. The fifth chakra then takes over and the body goes into anger and if it cannot destroy the future or the past it then destroys itself. This is why many people take their own lives but we don't really hear what they are saying before they do it. So you have to see the signs and hear the words. This is what I believe Jesus meant when he said, "those who see can see and those who hear can hear."☆

The eyes are the windows of your soul.

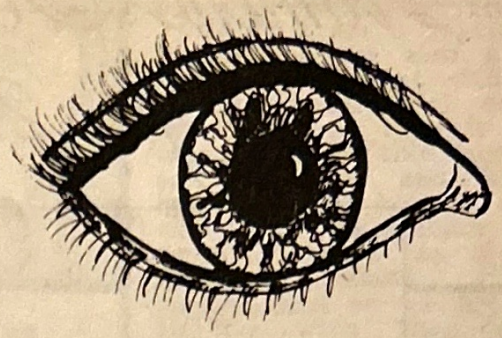
Have you been looking for a simple, effective way to find out what your body wants? You may not need to look further than your own mirror!

According to the 19th-century Hungarian, Ignatz von Peczely, the colored part of our eyes (the iris) displays nerve impulses from every region of our bodies.

Von Peczely happened upon this information by accident. As the story goes, he accidentally broke an owl's leg, and noticed that a spot soon appeared on the bird's iris. As the leg healed, the spot faded. This sparked his curiosity, and he began observing the irises of hospital patients. He developed a chart that linked specific organs to specific parts of the iris.

Today, those who diagnose the body through the study of the iris are known as iridologists. Though they are not as yet too well known, they have been busy perfecting their methods. Modern iridologists have the advantage, not only of years of research, but with the help of the iriscope, they can now see the irises of their patients more clearly, and refine their diagnosis even further, not to mention the fact that the patient can now receive a detailed photo of his iris.

Charlene Hubbard, a clairvoyant student in Sacramento, has been to an iridologist and I had a chance to ask her some questions regarding her experiences.



Q: What attracted you to iridology?

A: I was interested in nutrition and when I went to see this guy (iridologist), I originally went to him because he was a nutritionist. The technique he used to diagnose me was iridology.

Q: What were your first reactions to this form of diagnosis?

A: Prove it. Then he came on a little religious. When he said, "The eyes are the window of your soul," he had me. I thought I'd give it a try.

Q: What were some of the first things he did?

A: He showed me some charts...talked about color in the eyes...he went through a lot of information about our bodies. One of the first things he found, through looking at my irises, was a dark speck on the lower right side of my right eye, which he said indicated a fairly old drug deposit, something probably from my childhood...located in my female areas.

That, in a way, validated a lot of what he was doing, because when I was a child, I received cortisone shots for psoriasis in that area, and cortisone is known to stay around for a long time.

Q: Are there any things that you found particularly interesting?

A: Well, I sent a lot of friends to him, and it was amazing just how specific he was and how correct, he was always right on!

Q: Did you have pictures of your irises taken with an iriscope?

A: Yes, but by the time I had the pictures taken, I was already convinced that this stuff was real.

The pictures are really only of the iris, they don't include your eyelashes, or even the white part. It's amazing how much you can really see in the iris, particularly after you see the pictures...very fine fibers, impurities, varying shades of color. Bob (the iridologist) could look at my irises and see very specific things. The pictures showed me what you could train yourself to see. If you want, you can buy lenses, that combined with a mirror, enable you to look at your own irises and practice iridology at home.

Q: Are you still involved with iridology?

A: Not really, though I am still in contact with Bob for some health supplies, and I am more aware of the foods I eat and the effects they can have.

If iridology interests you, you're in luck. You do not have to study for years or purchase an Iriscope. There is an introductory book available to help you learn from your eyes and what's happening in your body. The book is entitled "The Eyes Have It" by Dr. Jenks, published by Bi. World Publishing Co. This book is written specifically for the beginner and, though simple, it will enable you to glean a good bit of information about your body through iridology. If your bookstore does not have the book, you may write to Dr. James D. Jenks, Box 1892, Tulare, CA 93275. The book costs $4.00. ☆

One of a man's biggest problems is that there is no room for clairvoyance in this society. Men are expected to be rational and analytical at all times, even emotions are usually frowned upon. But even so, almost all successful men use their clairvoyance. A salesman I know thinks that "all that psychic stuff is bunk." He doesn't believe in it. He is very successful. He reads his customers, knows what they want and how to sell it to them. How does he rationalize his clairvoyance? Simple, he just says that he knows people and can read them. Sounds like clairvoyance to me.

Clairvoyance just means "clear seeing." Seeing clearly, knowing the truth from the lie for yourself.

Many times men don't call their abilities clairvoyance, because they associate clairvoyance with women and female energy. To a lot of men, clairvoyance is a female ability, female intuition. It's not like a real gut level feeling or a hunch, which doesn't have anything to do with clairvoyance.

One of my biggest surprises, as I was learning to use my clairvoyant abilities, was that as I started to use it more and more I began to realize how much I was using it as a child and didn't even know it. Many men use clairvoyance without recognizing it as such. Clairvoyance comes very naturally to a man. This ability is a part of the body's survival mechanism. At a very early age clairvoyant ability is a dominant feature in a male, the ability to find mama and know where it's safe. As he gets older, clairvoyance and other psychic abilities begin to be turned down or off in favor of rationalization and learning to analyze.

Hello. I am a psychic and a healer. I am also a female. Being clairvoyant and psychic is a totally different experience for a woman than it is for a man. I know this from what I see of men and how they operate their bodies, and from what I experience as a female. It is as if we are coming from different spaces...and so we are. It has to do with the fact that women have a different body. The body we have chosen naturally affects how we see. I jokingly refer to this difference as 'the baby-making machine' or female creative energy. What I am referring to is the female reproductive system. It produces a quality of energy called female creative energy.

This is where the fun starts. Men do not have the same system so they really do not know what we are dealing with. It seems complicated, but is actually very simple. The creative energy is a very nourishing, healing, creative energy. It is constantly being generated and constantly saying 'Make a baby, make a baby, make a baby... This is where we, as spirit, come in. We have that equipment and that choice of making a baby with this energy. It is good for creating other things too; anything we want in fact. It is amazing energy, strong, persistent, real, validating to the female body and sometimes to others, too.

As we read, we allow the cosmic and earth energies to flow through our bodies. The energies flowing through different bodies contain different information and different insights. I have found that as these energies flow I am aware of the energy in my baby-making machine and the tremendous power there for creativity. As I read I practice allowing the machinery to release any energy in that area that holds a value judgement or a lie for me as a spirit. As I read, sitting in the center of my head, looking through my sixth chakra or energy center, I am able to be in neutral to what is in my awareness. I am able to see what is mine - where I want that energy to go and how I want to use it. If I don't like what I see in my energy, I can change it. I can consciously work on decharging pictures or energies while I read. I practice letting my baby-making machinery have a separate, yet valid, reality while listening to and hearing its message. Then I can bring it into present time according to what I want to create as a spirit. This is why I enjoy reading women. I can use this opportunity to see them as mirrors for what I am creating, have created, or might want to create for myself. I begin to be able to use my clairvoyance to gain power over my baby-making machinery by communication with this energy and updating the information. ☆

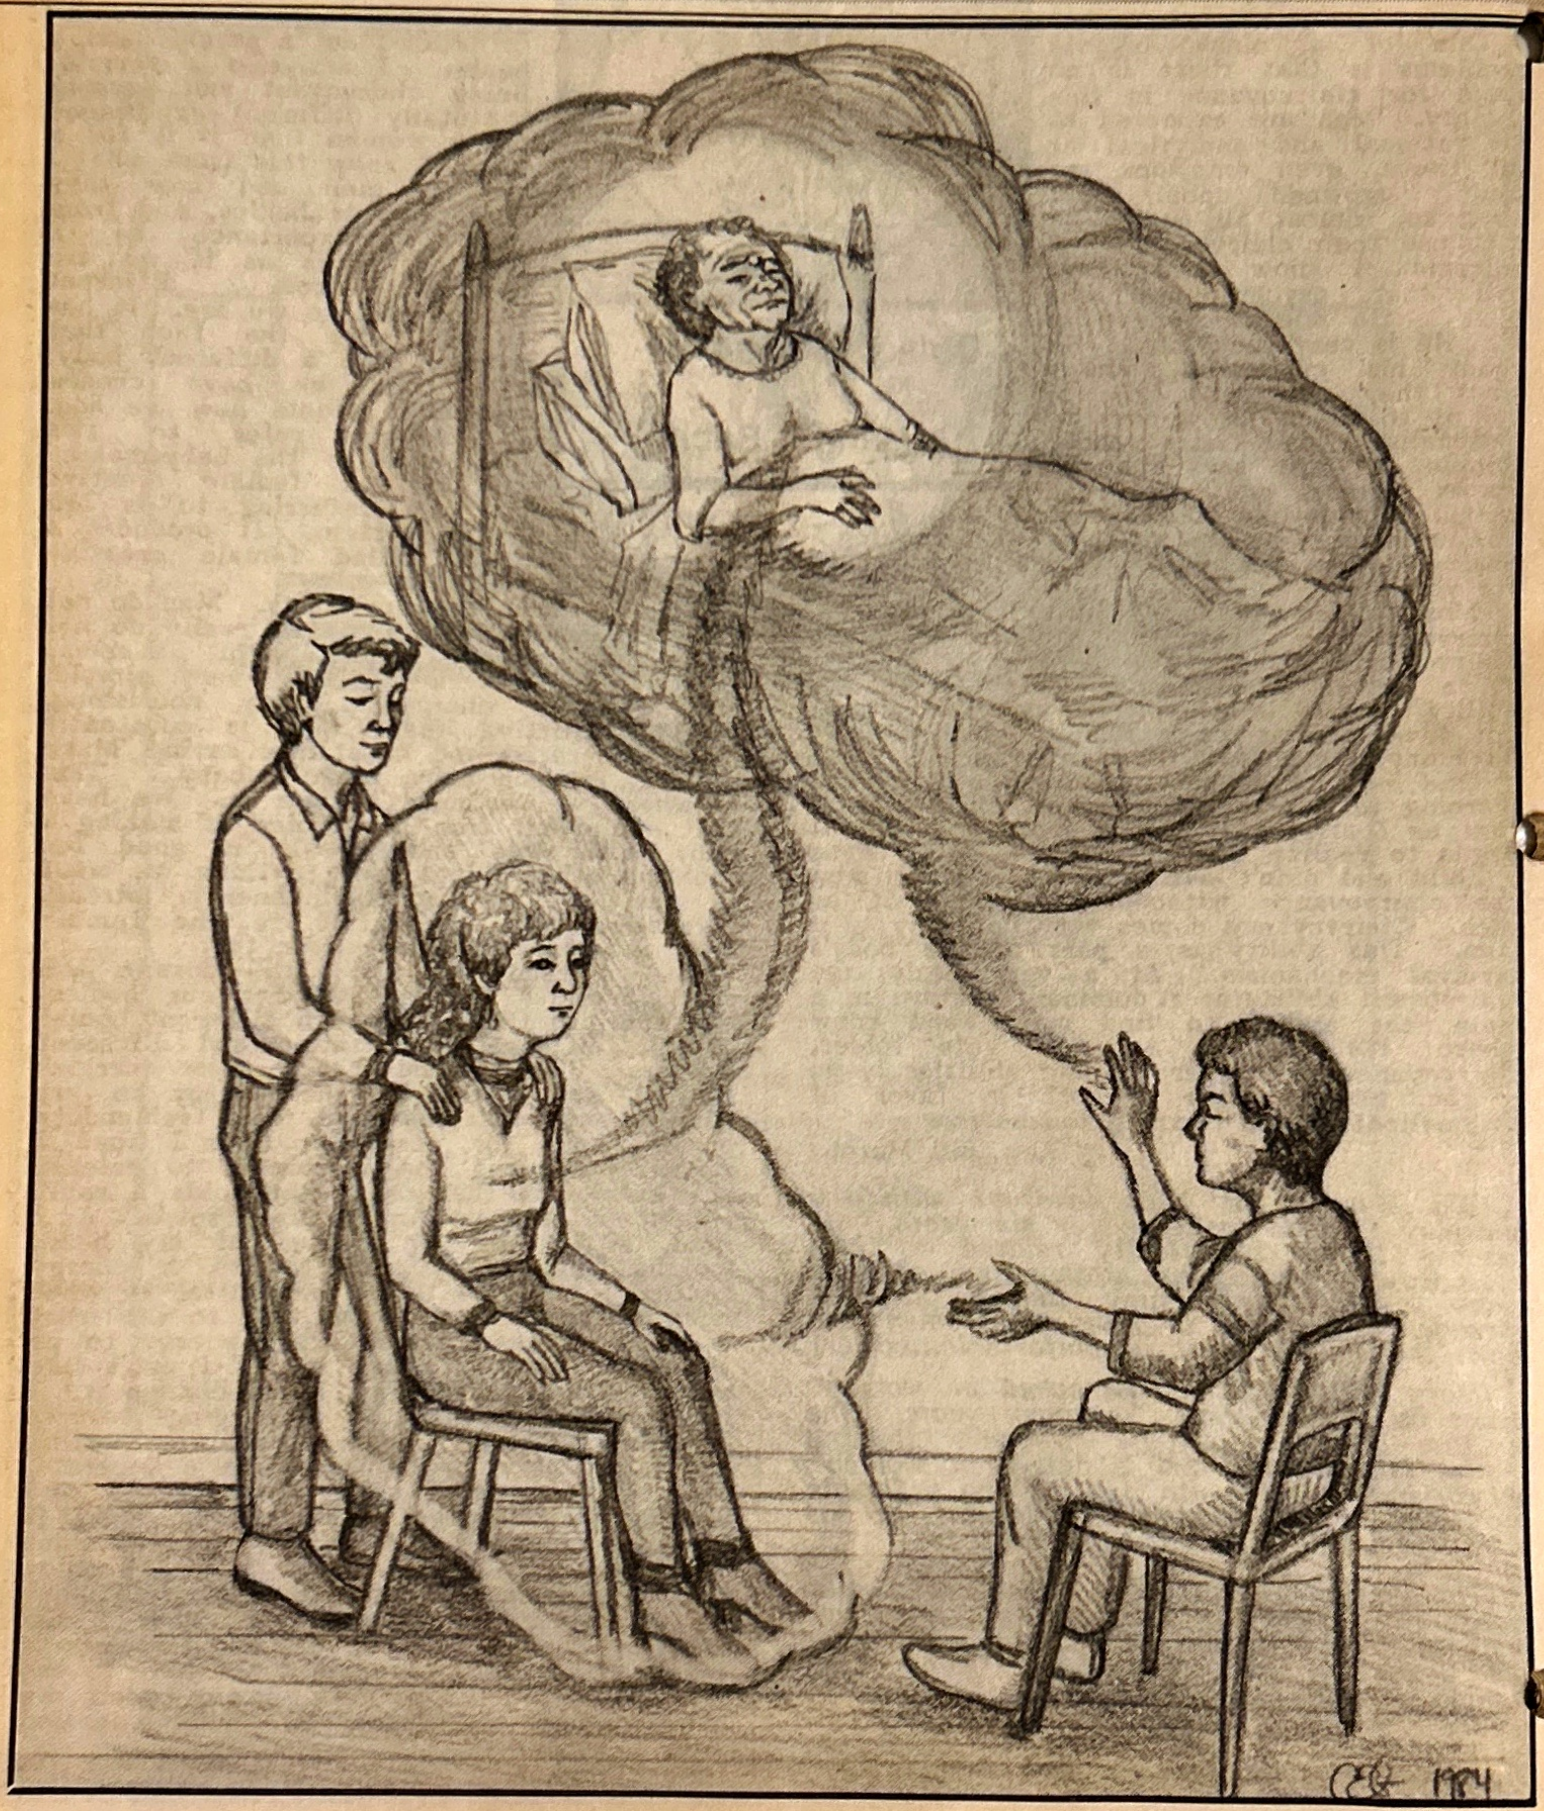
Psychic Healing You do it to Yourself



Healing From Afar

by Shelley Hodgen

Spiritual healing is an ancient art. Throughout the ages people have manifested their healing abilities in many different forms. Some of these include exorcism, laying on of hands, praying, out of body healing, and psychic surgery to name a few. Healers have their own unique way of healing and will often have an area that they specialize in or are very good at. One form of healing I teach is called absentee healing or long distance healing. This is a type of healing in which the person receiving the healing is not physically present in the room with the healers. Often it is not possible for a healer, or there may not be enough time to arrange for a healer to see the healee. I have seen absentee healings produce many miracles.

Just recently I have been teaching a group of clairvoyant students how to do absentee healings. The ability to see clairvoyantly is very important in these healings because the person is not there to answer questions or give feedback. The healer must rely on the certainty of what they are seeing going on with the person on a spiritual level.

In any healing the first thing the healer must do is find out how much of a healing the person wants or can have. In an absentee healing the clairvoyant must learn to communicate spirit to spirit to get this information. Once they receive permission, the healer can begin to remove and ground out or release foreign energy that is causing problems in the healee's space.

The group of clairvoyant students I am teaching performed many absentee healings over the course of a few weeks on people they knew. One woman had a friend with cervical cancer and the doctors wanted to begin surgical procedures.

As we began to look at what her problem was on a spiritual level, the healers noticed a lot of dark energy in the area of her female creative machinery. This energy appeared to be her father's energy and his concepts of what was good for her. His energy was getting in the way of her creating what she wanted, and by not releasing this energy from her space, it began to cause physical problems.

The healers removed this energy and two weeks later she came in to say that after her last check-up the cancer was gone and she had only a mild infection. Since her absentee healing, she said she had been working on healing herself and it worked!

Another clairvoyant student asked us to work on his 9-year-old daughter, Linda, who since birth has been having many behavioral and emotional problems. These problems included not talking or communicating, seizures, and violent destructive fits, all of which led to Linda having to be placed in a foster home for disabled children.

As the healers began to look at Linda's birth we noticed that Linda was a very capable spirit, and her biggest problem was that she had tried coming into her body too fast and with too much energy, because her body was so small at that time. This caused some circuits in her brain to be blown out. The healers began repairing the circuits in her brain and then they noticed that Linda had another spiritual problem. Linda is a trance medium. This is an ability in which a being will leave the body and allow another being to take over. Because Linda does not know how to control this ability, there were many beings around her fighting to control her space and body. The healers moved these beings back and communicated to Linda as a spirit how to start controlling this ability.

A few week later I talked to Linda's father and the reports were encouraging. Linda is sleeping much more soundly at night, her seizures and violent fits are much less severe and less frequent, and Linda had spoken her first word in several months.

An absentee healing, like any other spiritual healing, is saying hello to a spirit and allowing that spirit the right to heal itself.☆

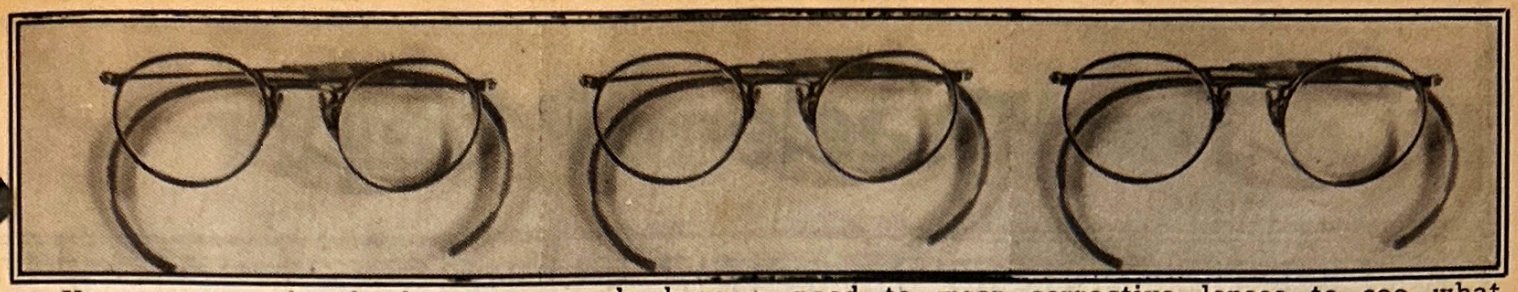
Wearing Glasses Solving a Psychic Problem

by Leigh Smith



Have you wondered why some people have to wear glasses and others don't? I have-mostly because I have had to wear them since the tender age of ten. What is it that causes some bodies to need glasses while others don't?

As I have become more aware of my psychic abilities and the energy of others in my space who do not want me to have these abilities, I have begun to notice that much of the cause for my need to wear "corrective lenses" is simply the energy which blocks my eyesight. There are, of course, many reasons for this, but some of the "pictures" or concepts I have found around my wearing glasses include: 1) If I did wear glasses as a child, none of the neighborhood bullies would dare to hit me (which worked everytime but one-- of course, he didn't have a mother so he totally lacked manners anyway). 2) Glasses made me look much more studious and scholarly (which was one sure way to make a hit with all the teachers). 3) Glasses provided another way to hide (this is very important for a psychic who is sensitive to energy and may not know how to protect him or herself against foreign energy). 4) As a psychic child, I did see many things which I wasn't supposed to see. Wearing glasses made me more receptive to a physical reality which was interpreted as "normal". Wearing glasses became a self-imposed handicap—I was trying to prove to people that I really couldn't see (psychically) because I needed glasses to see physically. It's just another one of those games that I used to agree to play.

The term "corrective lenses" implies that an individual needs some sort of visual correction to see what he is supposed to see, or maybe it's to correct the eyesight of someone who is seeing something he isn't supposed to see. Eyesight can deteriorate because of the energy which is thrown at someone for seeing too much. If this energy accumulates around the eyes, it can actually become a part of that space, i.e., blurred vision (either temporarily or permanently), or impaired "visual acuity."

It is interesting to note how the medical profession measures "visual acuity," or how well a person sees. According to Taber's Medical Dictionary, it is:

"determined by having the subject read letters of various sizes at a standard distance from the test chart. The result is expressed in a fraction. For example, 20/20 is normal vision. This means the subject's eyes have the ability to see from a distance of 20 feet what the normal eye would see at that distance. Twenty/forty means that a person sees at 20 feet what the normal eye could see at 40 feet."

What this says, in effect, is that what you see is measured against what everyone else sees on a physical level. If you don't see what everyone else has agreed to as being "normal," then you need glasses. You might need to wear corrective lenses to see what the "normal" eye sees, but as a psychic you don't need your physical eyes at all.

I had, apparently since birth, some astigmatism in my right eye. Since both of my parents are "bothered" by the same visual distortion, (and I was told that it was hereditary), I assumed the same thing would happen to me. Because of the astigmatism, my eyesight deteriorated to 20/400, which is a far cry from the "perfect" 20/20. (I wasn't quite into looking through the bottoms of coke bottles or looking like Kermit the Frog under a magnifying glass, but it was close).

While meditating one day and looking at the energy around my right eye, I discovered a being or spirit running his energy through my eye controlling what I saw. It seems this was part of a family agreement because this being was also in the space of each of my family members. Naturally, I immediately broke my agreement to be controlled in this manner, and removed the energy from my eye. Within a matter of 2-3 hours, a sty appeared on the corner of my eye. It was, of course, painful, but it was just my body's way of releasing the energy physically. I began running a reddish-gold color energy through the eye to help heal it and the sty was gone in about two days time. I was no longer bothered with the astigmatism (which I find very amusing, because I can remember my first optometrist telling me that it was a problem I would be stuck with for life, and that it would only get worse with time. The truth is — I was stuck with the picture of astigmatism and the only way it would get worse was if I continued making it my own).

Some people who use glasses tend to notice that their eyes do become weaker. I have noticed this effect myself, but only because of the energy that is "thrown" at glasses, and people who wear glasses. It seems that people like to see other people's eyes and I have often felt energy thrown at my glasses because they hide my eyes. There is often a lot of judgment about glasses, because of their style, color, or whatever. This energy sits right in front of the person's eyes making it more difficult to see through the glasses. The effect it has on me is it makes it more difficult to be in my body. I am aware of bouncing around trying to see around the energy rather than just moving it. Of course, once I become aware of the problem, it is simply a matter of grounding the energy out of my space-and presto - another miracle.

Having made the choice to own what I see, instead of agreeing to deny it, has made a tremendous difference in my own clairvoyant abilities. I don't have to ask someone else to interpret it for me.☆

The Oracle of Delphi

The Tholos beneath the Oralce of Delphi.

by Jacquelyn Smith and Charlene Hubbard

A HISTORY

The Greeks had an uncanny knack for building their temples and shrines on focal points of the planet Earth. The Acropolis commands power and foresightedness; the Temple of Poseidon, God of the sea, commands the sea; and the site of the Apollo's chief shrine, the Oracle of Delphi, is another natural power spot on the planet.

Delphi, in its natural amphitheatre, under the rosy outcrop of Mt. Parnassus, is one of the most beautiful and mystical spots in Greece as well as the world. The long valley of Olive trees and the healthful Castellian springs at the base of the steep cliffs of Mt. Parnassus, a holy mountain, together form the power and mystery of the Oracle.

Apollo, the sun god, the god of prophecy, of light, of reason and the patron saint of healers, was said to speak through the Oracle at Delphi. People came from far and wide to consult his priestess. History is full of accounts of battles, won or lost, according to the Delphic Oracle. Croesus, for example, believed his enemy would be defeated because the Oracle had told him that "a great empire would be destroyed." He assumed that the empire was Cyrus'; but instead, it was his own. The Delphic Oracle had a profound influence on temporal, as well as spiritual affairs in the Greek world.

The priestess, (known also as "Pithia", because Apollo was honored at Delphi for having killed a python) sat on a golden Delphic Tripod in an underground room of the Temple of Apollo. She allegedly sat over a crevice in a rock that emitted trance-inducing vapors. Those consulting the Oracle believed the sounds uttered by the priestess and translated into often ambiguous hexameter verse was the God's answer to their questions. The priestess understood the healing power of light and understanding. She was able to raise her body vibration high enough to allow other beings (in this case, gods) to speak through her. She attained a pinnacle on the trance-medium game on the planet. It was often the priest's interpretation of her utterances that created the political ambiguity sometimes connected with the Oracle.

In addition to Apollo's other realms of enlightenment, he was also the God of Prophecy, of Music, of Archery, of the Muses, of Purification and of Medicine. His temple was devoted to law, philosophy, high cultural awareness, healing and purification. His group was a busy set of people!

Sinners, outcasts and murderers would come to Delphi to be cleansed of their sins and rid of their Karma. Apollo was the father of Ascliepius, the legendary Greek physician who achieved such outstanding healing abilities that he was able to revive the dead. This feat aroused Zeus's anger and resulted in the fine physician's death.

Apollo was more widely worshipped than most of the gods. As god of the growing crops, he received tithe offerings at harvest time and, in return, he radiated his golden warmth and light from Delphi to enrich the soil. Everywhere he was associated with order, measure and beauty. Within the temple walls, where the Oracle was located, were the famous mottoes "Know Thyself" and "Nothing in Excess." The Greeks perhaps practiced the former rather more than the latter.

A CLAIRVOYANT READING

As I look clairvoyantly at Delphi two periods clearly emerge. The first period covers the creation of Delphi as a spiritual and healing place, and the second period covers Delphi's decline.

The world was running amuck. People were creating crimes against each other; the earth was being violated. The universal gifts that had been given to all, forgotten. People lost the essential law of "looking within", and instead were crying out in anguish and despair to an external force or god to help them in their plight.

In the cosmos a group agreement was being forged. Enlightened souls who hadn't previously taken bodies had been watching the games being played on planet Earth and it was getting out of control. They decided that now was the time for which they had been waiting, and so Delphi was born.

Through manifestation these healers created a "Paradise on Earth." Bright purple and red bougainvillaea colored the landscape, and fruit and olive trees abounded. Serenity was carried instead of war, gentle breezes and peace and harmony reigned supreme.

The healers who created Delphi were of both sexes. They dressed all in white, which they believed provided a healing for them. Physical sex was not practiced as all their energies were concentrated in keeping themselves in an "enlightened state" which they felt enabled them to fully aid those who came seeking assistance.

These Delphi healers used many tools; the most significant of which was the sun. The sun was used in private cleansing ceremonies held within a marble temple. The temple roof held a natural triangular shaped opening which filtered the healing sunlight into the temple and surrounded the healee on the altar.

All of the Delphi healers would gather, drain off the foreign energies and refill the healee with his/her own creative energies. The healee received a healing so powerful that it was as if being born anew.

The sunlight was also part of the creative environment. The Delphi healers were channels for the healing sun's energy. It flowed through them freely giving each body a "hello" and an acknowledgement of body's existence.

The harmonious creative energy created at Delphi attracted the spirits of those who had lost hope. Soon all types of people were being drawn to Delphi. The psychically handicapped came to have ailments cleared-up and came away with a renewed sense of purpose and rightness about their space. Murderers and sinners came seeking, they knew not what, but walked away in awe having gained a oneness with the God of their own heart which they never dreamed existed.

People with creative talents which of necessity had been repressed, came to this open environment and developed themselves. Schools were established and philosophy and cultural awareness thrived. This was truly a golden era!

Looking at the final years of Delphi, I see quite an energy change. A lot of brown energy seems to have stuck to the golden aura that originally surrounded Delphi. Healing and purifications were no longer the primary focus.

Originally a position of respect was held by one of the enlightened females. She was a priestess who often conducted healings and solved problems through communication with the God. This position in the final years had become the central energy focus.

A priest assumed the role of interpreting the answers the priestess received from consulting the Oracle. I see this priest surrounded by dark energy; he and others high in Delphi society had become corruptible. The earthly treasures and pleasures of the flesh beckoned these individuals.

People in power were quick to seize this opportunity and preyed upon the weaknesses of the priests. They knew that by controlling the priests, they could create whatever they wanted. They were aware of the mass programming taking place every time of Oracle was read. The general public had been psychically primed to create was handed down from the Oracle.

And so it went, battles were fought and won and kingdoms lost all through the manipulations of these priests who were responsible for interpreting the message of the Oracle to the people. ☆

PSYCHIC CHILDREN

Past Life Vision

by Mary Bell

Working with the children in the Yin Yang Seminary (a Seminary for children, ages six months to eighteen years, which encourages development of the psychic abilities of children and helps their parents understand the abilities inherent in all children...editor) began to change my awareness of how much children see clairvoyantly. Most children have a higher awareness of their ability to see and communicate with spirits than adults. This ability is usually programmed out by five to six years of age. If the ability to see clairvoyantly is validated and encouraged, children don't lose their certainty as they grow up. Many parents are beginning to recognize and communicate with their children about clairvoyance.

One afternoon I was talking to a mother about her two year old, John (not his real name). She had left him playing in the bathtub while she was in the next room. She heard him laughing and talking out loud to one of his friends, Michael Leigh. As she stood outside the door, he giggled and encouraged his friend's spirit, "That's good, Michael! Do that again."

When Sandy asked him what was happening, John said that he was playing with his friend's spirit. Sandy was able to validate the ability of her child, even though she didn't see Michael's spirit. Several months ago I was invited to a birthday party for a five year old named Robert. His mother, Michelle, wanted to show me a picture that Robert's three-year-old brother, Teddy, had drawn at home. Michelle had asked Teddy if there was a story to his picture and was told about the reincarnation he shared with several of his friends. Teddy, titled his story, "And We Lived Happily Ever After."

"That's my friend—his eyes, but my other friend was cut off. And my other friend was cut-off. And my other friend was turning around in a circle so fast that he bumped his head! Then I didn't have no friend and they were all gone. Then I was by myself. Then I had all of my friends back at school. And they loved me and we lived happily ever after. And then some of my friends became yellow, then they became orange, and then some of them became pink. And then my planet blew up and some of my friends went dead. I wasn't, Richard wasn't. Water splashed on us—and it stopped the volcano, and it splashed in our nose."

Michelle: "Teddy, who is your other friend that was turning around in a circle so fast that he bumped his head'?"

Teddy: "That's Richard."

Michelle: "And who is your other friend that was cut off?"

Teddy: "Paul."

Michelle: "Who is your friend with the eyes?"

Teddy: "Michael."

Michelle: "Michael Leigh?"

Teddy: "No. That's Michael! He's my friend. First he was bigger than me! And he growed bigger, and I growed bigger, and he was bigger than me and he was my friend. But now I'm bigger and he's little, and that's Allen."

Michelle and I began to talk about Teddy's clairvoyant abilities. As a spirit, he was using his clairvoyance to recognize other spirits from a past life and how they got together again in this lifetime. Teddy was very aware of how each spirit left its old body and later created a new one.

Michelle noticed that there was no fear or sadness as Teddy talked about his friends leaving and finding himself alone. He had all his spiritual information about creating a new body. Teddy and all his friends created the Yin Yang Seminary. Here is a group of spirits who took bodies and decided to change the game this lifetime. They created a spiritual haven where clairvoyance and all other psychic abilities are validated.

In meditation circle each day, the children talk about the pictures they see as they close their eyes. They talk about which pictures are theirs and which pictures someone gave to them. Many times they choose to destroy a concept they were given and replace it with a picture they create for themselves. By meditating each day, children learn to turn their energy inward and look clairvoyantly at who they are as spirit. ☆

DYSLEXIA
Spiritual Ability
Made a Medical Problem

by Cathy Langlois

Imagine a simple piece of chocolate cake held in your hand in front of you. Make it any kind you like (mine was a 6-layer truffle cake!). Close your eyes and take your index finger on your other hand and move it to a point about one foot in front of you and describe how the cake looks from there (you should be able to see those layers now!)

Now imagine being over the cake about 12 inches. Is the frosting dark or light chocolate? Is it smooth or gooey? Now be in front of the cake (no fair turning your hand around) and describe it.

Could you do all that? Congratulations! You've just tested positive for a condition known as dyslexia and you're in good company. Supposedly, there are between 22 and 55 million Americans that have some degree of the so-called learning disability called dyslexia. I am one of them.

This simple exercise, along with a short interview and a series of questions based on your ability to get by normally in this world, are the basis of testing for dyslexia at the Dyslexic Correction Center (DCC) in Burlingame.

As the founder and director stated, however, this is not a test as to the degree this condition affects you.

What does it mean to take a simple visualization test and all of a sudden be labelled with a word that has come to be applied to people with a "problem." What is dyslexia?

The medical dictionary defines it as a form of aphasia (brain damage) marked by the inability to develop good reading skills. The old syndrome—But Johnny can't read, so . . . he must be slow . . . or retarded possibly . . . or dyslexic! Gasp!

Now wait a minute. I'd always been considered on the fringe, especially since I started fessin' up to being psychic, but brain damaged? I'm not going to buy that part of an answer for a condition that the medical community doesn't know how to deal with (another of the many).

There are many people with out-of-control psychic abilities who have been medically diagnosed as brain damaged or otherwise psychologically and physiologically impaired, which seems to be an easier diagnosis to make when the alternative is to admit ignorance or, perhaps, the presence of a spiritual problem they know nothing about.

Was dyslexia being swept aside the same way? Could between 22 and 55 million people (probably a low estimate) be brain damaged? I know we have all been exposed to lots of food additives and other undesirable substances, but brain damage sounds too extreme a diagnosis.

I decided to find out more about it and made a visit to the DCC at the Reading Research Council Offices. I spoke with Ron Davis and his director of public information, Larry Rochester. The center is considered a bit of a maverick institution by medical experts as well as education administrators, because they deal with dyslexia as a problem.

Davis, who was labeled dyslexic from childhood and stumbled on a way to correct it in 1980, says: "Dyslexia is actually an unusual ability to use more of the total mind capacity at a point in time when there is confusion or conflicting information coming through the senses." What did that mean? I didn't know. It still didn't make sense to me. So I asked for a simple description.

"Dyslexics think in terms of concepts, not words. Here's an example," says Rochester. "If you give a child a soft gray cat and he turns it upside down to look at its stomach and then its tail, it is still a cat to him.

Could between 22 and 55 million people be brain damaged?

When you show children the symbol CAT, they can still turn it around into at least forty variations of that symbol ATC, TAC, and that won't make sense.

Unfortunately, our educational systems are set up for people who think in word symbols, not concepts. They are designed by people who think this way. The "problem" is in the educational system.

Some other symptoms are words jumping around on a page, words reversing or that feeling of movement when you're not moving, like when a car next to you at a stop light moves and you jerk because you think you are moving.

Davis' definition of dyslexics as "talent" has brought him many skeptical responses from educators and the medical field. At one symposium where he presented his discovery, there were audible snickers in the audience.

Many find it hard to take his solution seriously because it hasn't been thoroughly studied at several prestigious universities. In other words, it is just too simple.

After diagnostic tests, 40 hours of a correction program is recommended. Dyslexics have a point from which to work. (Psychics call this the "center of the head".) They talk a lot about getting on point in order to control this ability. As quick as the correction program is, however, they still need to catch up on the learning and changes needed in their lives often to overcome the labels of retarded and slow.

Steve Durant, a Petaluma barber, who has corrected his ability, states in a newspaper article: "It was easy for me to imagine I was an alien from another planet. I couldn't find my niche in the world . . . I wanted to live a normal life but I couldn't pull it off. It was like I've been screaming all my life, "Somebody understand." Durant has made dramatic improvement after completing the Center's program.

With the incredible success rate, which Davis claims is 96%, educators should be on the band wagon. "Not so," says Rochester. "School systems get between $2,000 and $10,000 a year per/child in the Special Education Department from the federal government. Most of it goes into other parts of the school. School administrators are no longer teachers--they are business people and they don't want to lose that money. Only the teachers are with us." He says that progress is being made, however, in terms of availability to school systems. In one case, a high school principal paid to have his son go through the program when he couldn't get school support for it.

Well, after hearing about how educators and the medical community aren't supportive of this simple method of correcting a talent and giving Davis a rather scientific explanation (a distortion in the beta apparent brain cells in the midbrain) I was interested to observe it from the spiritual side.

The parallels in the way psychics and dyslexics are treated and labelled are too similar to be a coincidence. A quote from a DCC brochure reads as follows, "The learning disabled have a natural talent, a perceptual gift which allows them to be more "certain" than normal people of those things encountered in their environment. This talent allows them, at times of confusion, to instantly evaluate information received by the senses before this information is transmitted to their mind and recorded there."

As a psychic, I see this "certainty" as a spiritual ability. I think dyslexics are psychics with an ability out of control. It is called separation between body and spiritual communication. The spirit is talking, but the body cannot hear it. When I asked Davis if dyslexia couldn't be a spiritual problem known as being out of the body, (causing communication between spirit and body not to connect or make sense), he verified that he often had out of the body experiences and was very aware of being spirit. He then again lapsed into much of the medical information about disorientation in midbrain cells, but also says: "Spirit is the last to become aware of the midbrain cell problem. Once the spiritual part of us decides something about the autonomous situation, it makes the adjusting. The spiritual part of us is senior to the body."

I don't blame Davis for not particularly wanting to go a step further and see dyslexia as a spiritual problem. His hold on credibility for his center is threatened enough because he doesn't have the almighty Ph.D. (although he has hired some people with very respectable credentials), let alone delving into something considered even more anathematic to the medical community--psychic ability.

But that is what I see happening in the diagnosing and treatment of dyslexics. Steve Durant stated in an article that his parents put out a fortune in fees trying to find out what was wrong with him. One doctor even had him crawling around on the ground.

It's not an uncommon story among psychics: ringing in the ears, spacing out, erratic mood change, feeling different than others, difficulty understanding things at times, loss of energy, too much energy; these are some of the symptoms of spiritual problems that people spend millions of dollars on each year to try and cure medically or psychologically. These are also similar to some of the symptoms of dyslexics.

So what is happening that 22 to 55 million people can be identified as having a condition defined as brain damage? If this is in fact an ability, a psychic or spiritual ability that is out of control, why is it happening to so many people?

Being a spirit with psychic abilities in the body has been systematically punished and discouraged by our educators, doctors and religions for a long time. When a child or adult is told (as he exhibits those psychic abilities that make it hard to lie to him/her or control him or her) that he is bad or wrong to be that way, he either shuts down those abilities or uses them in a less noticeable way out of the body.

I see dyslexia as using your psychic abilities out of the body so the information the spirit receives cannot clearly be communicated to the body for it to respond appropriately.

It is indeed a special ability; it's being out of the body as a spirit.

Two trained psychics I spoke with said they saw dyslexia as that 360-degree awareness you get out of your body, and that "on the point training" looked to them to be like getting that spirit back into the body (or center of head).

They also saw that when you are completely out of the body and perhaps "into a book," the spirit may be looking out from the book and the words would appear backwards or sideways.

If so many more people are being identified as having this special ability, I think it is a very definite sign that it's really a rising awareness of psychic abilities. There just isn't enough awareness to have an educator say, "Oh, it's O.K., you're having a problem reading because you are not in your body." Or to have a doctor tell someone you don't have a brain dysfunction, your spirit just needs to get into that body. But these are the people that the majority will turn to for answers.

Until it can start to be an accepted reality that spirit is real and people's body problems are often spiritual problems, we probably won't hear any comments like the above except from other self-aware psychics and perhaps some spiritual leaders.

Just the move toward saying, "This isn't a problem; I'm not weird, I just have a special ability" is the first step to getting that ability under control. It is one of the first steps toward learning that being a spirit who has created a body to be in gives you psychic abilities and that you can control and use them, not consider them a problem. Pretty amusing that Albert Einstein was considered dyslexic. Where does that leave you? You may be psychic, not dyslexic.

DYSLEXIA: The True Stories

STORY #1

When Jimmy's eyes fogged over and he could no longer respond to my voice, I knew he would stop reading the story verbatim. I knew it was over. He was sitting with the book in his lap-just like my first grade teacher used to do when she was reading to a whole class and wanted us to see the pictures. She would be seeing it right side up (but first grade teachers can be expected to work miracles like that every day). I saw that another being had started to take charge of Jimmy's abilities to read. He had been reading the House Biter without a miss. Inside down.

But now Jimmy couldn't read. He turned the book around and failed to recognize a word.

And he had a similar problem with writing. Some of his letters--S,N,E,J,B and D would sometimes be backwards or perfect mirror images.

But Jimmy could write his letters correctly. However, the being who came into his body would destroy that ability in a flash. Jimmy could write his letters correctly, but the being that came into his body made him write perfect mirror images. Jimmy enjoyed the game and it became apparent after a while, that he could call the beings at will and watch the adults oooh and ahh over the sudden changes.

Jimmy is lucky. He is in a special school for psychic children where the teachers recognize spirit when it invades a human being. Writing backwards, upside down or inside out or reading upside down (when all the diagnostic tests say you shouldn't be able to do that) is not wrong or bad. At the Yin Yang Seminary for psychic children in Santa Rosa students are validated as spirit in a body and taught to recognize when another being comes around and tries to change the game.

(note:-"Jimmy" is a fictitious name used to protect the identity of the child in this true story.)

STORY #2

I taught elementary school for nearly 10 years in and around San Francisco. I was taught to correct all "wrong" handwriting by making the students copy over my correct letters and numerals. I knew that there was nothing "wrong" with these children that all my peers insisted on labeling "dyslexic"--such an ominous-sounding name. I knew (with no foreknowledge or study) that these children were especially intelligent and somehow gifted. Not until I began to develop as a clairvoyant, did I fully understand my anger at the professionals who knew so much more than I. I was also angry at myself: How easy it is to give up one's seniority to someone who has a PHD or who is in clinical study and knows so much more than a mere mother or a simple classroom teacher.

There should be no special schools for "dyslexic" children. Instead teachers should be taught to recognize the spirit of the child--know when it is in the body and when it is out of the body. Children have hundreds of out of body experiences--some have hundreds daily. Only a few teachers recognizes the amazing power of spirit to change the game; most of those who are aware don't know what to do about it.

Unfortunately, the answer is simple. Hello. When you say hello to spirit--especially spirit that invades another another body--it responds. The state, however, will never get the message. I guess that leaves the best education in the hands of the clairvoyant who can communicate to the spirit of the child.

Food for Psychics

by Michael Kolack

Much has been written about the healing properties of Vitamin C (ascorbic acid). If only half the claims made for this vitamin are true, it may still be our most important vitamin. It is used by the human body in so many ways to heal itself that most people probably should be taking it as a supplement. It is interesting considering that most animals manufacture their own Vitamin C. Many eons ago Man decided (along with apes and guinea pigs) to lose this ability. It looks to me that in order to take a step up in energy, evolution, if you will, it was necessary to sacrifice this ability.

According to an authority on Vitamin C, the late Dr. Irwin Stone, animals that have this ability create large amounts of C for their size. A rat under normal conditions produces 5000 mg. a day. Under stress they increase it up to 15000.(1)

Maybe we should take a hint from the lowly rat. Vitamin C helps the body heal itself of the effects of stress or energy. Who in these times doesn't have to deal with some level of stress. (The B complex and Magnesium are also antistress nutrients.)

The other problem we encounter in these modern times is environmental toxins. Vitamin C helps our bodies deal with this problem also. This antioxidant property, as it is called, may also prevent cancer caused by pollution. And in megadoses, Vitamin C's detoxifying actions on heavy metals and pesticides may be very important.

Roman J. Kutsky Ph.D, in his Handbook of Vitamins, Minerals and Hormones, lists the functions of C mainly as an antioxidant, in wound healing, formation of calcified tissues, growth, and capillary and adrenal gland maintenance. Conditions that require C supplements are scurvy, pregnancy, lactation, heavy metal intoxication, stress, trauma, allergies, old age, high protein diet and infections.(1)

Linus Pauling Ph.D, believes that heart problems may be caused by lack of Vitamin C. Hardening of the arteries might be prevented with Vitamin C and lecithin.(2)

It may not be the high cholesterol diet that is the problem after all. It's interesting that the same things that raise cholesterol levels also destroy Vitamin C. Cigarettes, food additives, pollutants, stress, the birth control pill, and sugar.

The case for Vitamin C grows almost daily. In his "Vitamin Bible", Earl Mindell lists these benefits of C:

Helps heal wounds, burns, bleeding gums
Aids in decreasing blood cholesterol
Can prevent infections
Can be a natural laxative
Decreases blood clots
Fights colds
Helps us live longer by aiding in the production of collagen (the glue that holds us together)
Helps body deal with allergies
Prevents scurvy

Another way to look at how C works is to look at the energy of the body. The body has cycles that, once it is started, it must complete. If a cycle is interrupted, the energy gets stuck, and can cause a problem in the body. The cycle of eating starts when we put the food in our mouth. This is the start of a chain reaction that breaks down the food, simplifies it, until it gets to the cells in a form they can use. The job of vitamins is to keep this cycle going.

Vitamin C is important because it is so versatile a healer. Not only does it help keep the cycles going, it is also used by the body when the energy gets stuck. As long as these cycles move along, the lifeforce energies keep flowing, and the body stays healthy. Vitamin C helps maintain the flow.

According to Benjamin and Sarah Colimore, in their book, Nutrition and Your Body, three essential cycles could not be completed without Vitamin C:

---The synthesis of two important glandular secretions, thyroxin and adrenelin.

---The catalyzation of the amino acids which form collegen, proline, and lysine.

---The activation of white corpuscles, which destroy dangerous microorganisms.(4)

The natural sources of C are mainly fresh fruits and vegetables. The best being citrus fruits and dark green and leafy vegetables. Vitamin C is unstable and easily destroyed by water, cooking, heat, and light. It is excreted from the body in 2-3 hours.

With the many uses the body has for C, and the many things that can destroy it, there is small chance of taking too much. However if this worries you, the first sign of too much C is a mild case of diahrrea.

And listen to your body. Remember you're psychic too.

Vitamin C - The Great Healer

Psychic ? Predictions

by Donna Cunningham

Want to make a name for yourself as a psychic? Whether or not you have any genuine psychic ability, you can do it by following the simple rules set down in this article.

For those of you with no demonstrable ability in other kinds of e.s.p., (mind-reading, clock-stopping, key bending, and the like), I would recommend that you become a prophet. Future predictions are more dramatic and convincing than any kind of other psychic ability, because the possibility of cheating through a confederate are practically nil. Also, being in the future, they are pretty hard to pin down and check on. If your prediction hasn't come true yet, that's because it's still in the future! Seriously, prophecy can be profitable, and this article will teach you how to do it.

GENERAL RULES

The first general rule is — be general! The more vague and general you are now, the more possible events you can stretch to fit the prediction in retrospect. Say things like "a well-known personality" (no specifics about what they are known for) or "a prominent politician" (don't say whether they are city, state, or federal or whether they are currently in office or not). Predict confidently that "changes will be made in..." without saying what kind of changes and whether it's for better or worse. After all, changes are always being made in everything.

An exception to this is with really prominent and terribly predictable characters. You know that Elizabeth Taylor is going to be sick some more, and that Jacqueline Onassis will marry someone wealthy, that Frank Sinatra will continue to brawl, that Nixon will try to make one more comeback, and so on. Why not improve your score by making predictions about them? That way no one can accuse you of always being general.

Be sure to use all the right catch-words in talking about your predictions. Vibrations is one you'd be lost without—it sounds so authentic and convincing that nobody is going to expose their ignorance by asking you what you mean. Karma is in vogue too—use that word for anything bad that happens to people you disapprove of or for anyone who doesn't follow your advice. Aura is another good word—usually most effective when it's an aura of gloom or tragedy surrounding someone. (Always remember that predictions of tragedy, misfortune, and disaster will get you more of an audience than happy events).

Be sure to disclaim any desire whatsoever to be psychic. Remember to insist that it is a misfortune—something you never wanted that was thrust upon you. Try not to smile when they pay you. Finally, get your predictions on record somewhere with some "unimpeachable" source, preferably a skeptic. Get them printed in anything that keeps back copies, even if you have to pay for it. Or, get on radio or TV with your predictions—even if you have to call up every radio talk show in town. Then when some of the sure-fire predictions you'll be getting from this article start coming true, you can point back to the documented predictions you made.

TEN SURE-FIRE PREDICTIONS

By following the general rules listed above, you have been preparing the ground for people to take you seriously and listen to you when you make predictions. The ten listed below are guaranteed, can't miss prophecies for the coming year (or any year, for that matter) and they are yours free of charge. The only thing I would ask is that you change the wording and order enough so they aren't recognizably the same as everyone else's who reads this. (Another thing I would ask is that you not send them into the Enquirer's Prediction contest. Mine are already in, with an earlier postmark than yours, and I predict that the $500 prize is mine.)

1) The U.S. economy will gradually recover, but there'll be a lot less of everything than in the past.

2) Still another tragedy threatens the Kennedys this year—serious illness or a brush with death. (Very safe—there's always something happening there, and besides, Rose is getting along in years.)

3) There will be a rash of divorces among the younger Hollywood stars. (Be as specific as you like—last year's marriages are this year's divorces.)

4) A prominent U.S. politician who is running for reelection will have a skeleton in his closet revealed through muckraking activity. (Election year? Sure bet!)

5) One of our beloved older comics will pass on before the year is out. (Got to happen—most of them are over 70.)

6) Many lives will be lost in a big earthquake in Central or South America. (Happens nearly every year.)

7) After a major air disaster, which kills and injures a large number of people, an investigation will show that inattention to safety precautions was responsible. (There's a major crash at least once a year, and lax safety precautions are always found to be the reason.)

8) Right-to-lifers will mount a major effort to stop abortions and nearly succeed. (They do every year, so you can't help but be right.)

9) A miraculous new cure for cancer will be discovered, but the American medical establishment will succeed in getting it barred from use in this country. (So what else is new?)

10) New evidence will come to light about the Kennedy assassinations. Public pressure will mount to reopen the investigations, but the files will remain closed. (Name me one year this hasn't happened, but it sounds impressive.)

LONG-RANGE PREDICTIONS

The yearly predictions of the type given above aren't enough, if you're serious about becoming a prophet. In order to establish your credentials, you also have to publish somewhere the gloomiest possible predictions about the future of man. This is a field where it's hard to be original—whatever you come up with, it's bound to have been done already- all the way back to Nostradamus.

But there are some long-range predictions that are practically obligatory. So that you won't miss out on any and risk damaging your credibility, this article contains a crib-list.

Anyone who is anybody has predicted that:

1) The U.S. and Russia will go to war over the Mideast.

2) The African nations will emerge into a war-like menace that will unite the U.S., Russia, and China.

3) The ozone layer will be destroyed by aerosol sprays (or jet-trails, air pollution, or radiation) and threaten life on earth.

4) Population growth will reach disastrous levels, only to be checked by war, disease, and famine. (The first person to go on record with this prediction was Malthus, the 18th century economist, so it has quite a respectable history.)

5) The avatar of the New Age will be born, along with an evil antichrist, and a religious war between their followers will nearly destroy civilization.

6) At the end of this century, the world will end.

As you can see, this is real gloomy stuff and liable to depress anyone. Nonetheless, it's necessary if you want people to take you seriously as a psychic. Best get them published and get it over with, then forget about them.

CONCLUSION

I wrote this self-help article for you, so that you could avoid the kinds of struggle I had in finding these rules out for myself the hard way. If anyone asks you about your teacher or guru, you may mention my name. I give private lessons in psychic development and my prices are quite reasonable.

You ARE a Spirit

As a child and through my youth I was taught, and very much believed, that I had a soul.

The phrase went just like that. "You have a soul." I had soul.

In the Clairvoyant Training Program of the Church of Divine Man one of the things taught is how to communicate with spirit. When a beginning seminarian wants to distinguish that he is talking to the spirit, not the body, he or she says "your body is in effort, but your being is amused about it," instead of saying "hello, your body is in effort, but you have the great ability to be amused about it."

It's such a funny picture to me: "your being." It's like your body has this nice pet on the leash. I just can't resist reminding them, "Hey wait a minute , if that's your being, then who are you?"

You are the being, that's who I am talking to! Hello!

It reminded me of that childhood phrase, 'I have a soul'.

I don't have a soul; I am a soul.

I am not a body; I have a body. I am working with a body and learning how to create with this body.

When you have a soul, then the body is senior to you the spirit. You are becoming a body to the degree that you have forgotten who you are. You are a free spirit, with many abilities that the body doesn't possess. You don't have to play this great game of life solely on the restrictions of the body.

Can you get rid of a headache by just moving energy out of your space? Being able to see what I did yesterday, many people would say, impossible! No way! That is because a body, by itself, can't do it. They have become the body to the degree that they have totally forgotten who they are - spirit, and what their abilities are as spirit. A spirit does not have to be in effort. It can work with energy, heal, create events, change the weather and is not restricted by time.

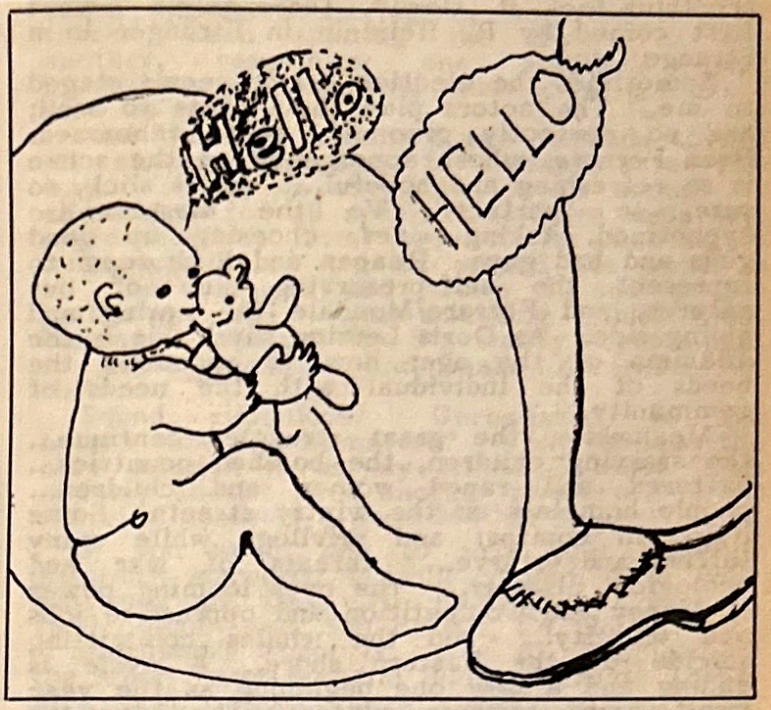
Some spirits even arrive at the greatest of all ironies, they become atheists. Spirit doesn't exist, "all that I am is this body sitting here, please address me as such!"

There are many more who believe in spirit, but it is more abstract. "God is spirit, but that doesn't have much to do with anything around me at the moment! God doesn't have anything to do with me. Neither do spirits. I get along as best I can, keep those spirits away from me!"

Or there are those that believe that they are a spirit, but it's more akin to a filing cabinet. All the good deeds and all the bad deeds are stored there, and when you die that spirit of yours is going to be accountable.

You are a spirit; a living, growing spirit who is working with a body, your body, and learning how to create and communicate with those other spirits around you.

Because psychics believe and work with spirits they have different and unique



Because psychics believe and work with spirits, they have different and unique prayers. These prayers are set at an energy level to communicate with spirit. Here is one of the prayers that is said at the Church of Divine Man Seminary for Psychics, the Berkeley Psychic Institute. This prayer is said before a psychic aura reading. It goes like this:

As we read we allow the cosmic and earth energies to flow through our bodies opening the doors through which we become more aware of our spirituality and increase the communication with the God of our Hearts. Let us pray: May it be with the Blessings of the Supreme Being that whatever happens during this reading will benefit each of us in our spiritual growth, awareness, and understanding.

As the psychic sits down in trance and starts to look at the energy and mental image pictures of the person in front of him, he or she reminds himself that he is a spirit with full capabilities for using, changing, and controlling energy. As a spirit he has the ability to be in good communication with another spirit and the "God of his heart". These are the spiritual things that are most important to him. This allows the psychic to remember who he is as spirit and all the abilities that he possesses.

May it be with the approval and validation from God that what ever happens during this reading will further the spiritual growth and awareness of spirit to know who he is and what his own abilities are. Amen.

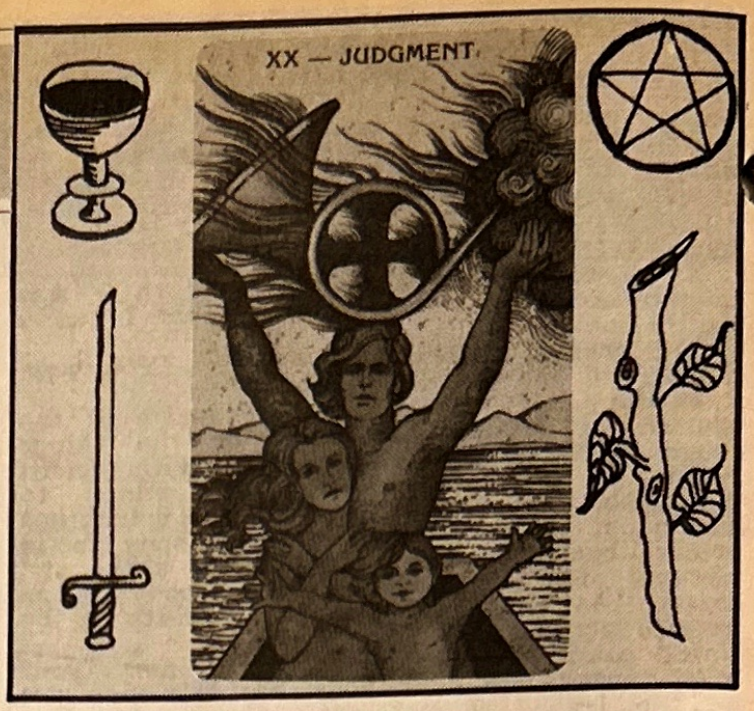
Healing with Tarot

through Shekhinah Mountainwater



To grok: deepen with a subject, see/think/feel it slowly, thoroughly... word first coined by R. Heinlein in Stranger in a Strange Land.

Sometimes the election drama seems staged to me. The actors play their parts so well; are so perfectly groomed, seem rehearsed. Even Ferraro, whose appearance on the scene is so refreshing and hopeful,.. she is slick, so sure, so "perfect." We the masses are hypnotized, taking sides, choosing up good guys and bad guys. Reagan and Bush seem to represent the self-preserving side of our natures, and Ferraro/Mondale the caring and giving side. As Doris Lessing says, this is the dilemma of the age; how to reconcile the needs of the individual with the needs of community.

Meanwhile, the great struggles continue... the starving children, the bombed countries... battered and raped women and children... people homeless on the wintry streets. Some living in comfort and privilege while many suffer and starve... threats of war and ecological disaster... the ever looming power of Money and Competition and oppressive jobs and scarcity... and the whales committing suicide on the Eastern shore. A cycle is ending and a new one beginning as the year itself turns towards winter. The elections seem to take us out of all of that for a while, dazzling us with meaning, potentiality, hope. And then one day we wake up and realize that a president and vice president have been elected and the inequities of everyday life are still staring us in the face. We begin to wonder, who are the real playwrights, the engineers of this incredible opera?

The best part of it all is when we can communicate about it. Because we are the authors, after all, and when we dialogue and critique our work with one another, we can ravel and unravel what we have made... change reality in other words. This makes me love America, especially when I realize that She was founded on the principle of free speech... among other things which we still must defend, even here.

There are theories, among esoteric types, of very magical beginnings to America. I read some things about this in a wonderful mystical book called Secret Teachings of All the Ages, by Manly P. Hall. According to Hall there is a group of souls called The Great White Brotherhood, composed of Avatars such as Christ and Buddha and many other great spirits, who have guided the historical development of America since Her beginnings. Their purpose has always been to help create a land of true liberty for all human beings who live in here. (Though, when we look around we wonder; did they succeed?) Hall also tells us that on the day of the signing of the Declaration of Independence there was a magician present who turned the tide in its favor. This mysterious gentleman whom people called "the professor," was also said to have designed our flag, which Betsy Ross later brought into being. Apparently the Professor was a part of this great spiritual conspiracy. Some of the symbols on our money indicate mystical beginnings too, such as the pyramid and eye on our dollars. There's more to the American dream than meets the eye...

But getting back to the Demos and the Repubs... doesn't it seem significant that the people in America don't even vote? How cynical they must feel, how worthless and meaningless voting must seem to them. Perhaps they are right; perhaps abstaining from voting is their silent protest, a statement by default. Whether I vote for you or against you, my own expenses keep going up every year, there is still threat of violence, I am still questionable as a psychic and a woman... still facing a world where love, health and support are scarce.

And then I go within and try to trance/dream a better world... find a better system. I think of circles and collectivity and "small is beautiful" and neighborhoods. I see people deciding things with circular communication forms instead of the linear ones in the world today. Instead of having two people up behind podiums arguing with each other, we would have them sitting in a circle with all the media people, and each would have their turn to speak, going round and round the circle until agreement is reached. This is how the Native Americans decided policy for centuries before the white men came, calling it Passing the Rattle. This is how women's circles do their "Consciousness Raising" process, and this is how consensus is reached in many groups today. Maybe the big government will be replaced by self-government, as we the people take more responsibility and localize our power by working together, communicating with each other in spirit...

My attention swings outward again, and I think of Sonia Johnson and Barbara Marx Hubbard and Helen Caldicott and Jesse Jackson, who are all looking at the future of this planet and alternative ways of doing things. They are talking about the 100th Monkey and a Peace Room in the Pentagon and disarmament and Rainbow Coalitions of people of all colors, shapes and sizes. These people represent something new on the political scene, because getting elected is not really the point of their campaigns. Communication and the spreading of new ideas is really what they are about. Whether or not they ever serve in office, they will be out there stirring up change and consciousness.

No one person can really decide the fate of the world. An individual is limited by his/her singular perception of things. Nor should one person be blamed for everything that goes wrong. In this sense, President Reagan is both a hero and a scapegoat, adored by some, hated by others. Because he can only act on his own perceptions, his policies can become dangerous and destructive. A circle of communication would eliminate that sort of monocracy or rule of one. In a circle all voices are heard, all opinions are important, all are equal. The truth is in the center, decisions can only be acted upon when everyone agrees. Native Americans would pow wow for days and nights until consensus was reached.

I pulled three cards out of a deck (Shekinah's Tarot) for the question: "What is the essence of what I have just written?" I got Lightning, which replaces the Tower in older decks, Maya, The Mother Goddess birthing manifestation; replaces the old Emperor and Empress, and Ngame, the Maiden of Fire. In some ways Ngame carries the same energies as the old Knight of Wands; assertiveness, risk-taking, making big moves.

To me these cards add up to "revolution." I see this word as many-layered, containing meanings both political and cosmic. The Lightning card shows a rebirth; a new form appearing in society. On the spirit level revolution becomes evolution; the evolving of the race. Ngame shows the forces of change; the movers and the shakers.

And so, this psychic says let's elect them all! Put them in the Whitehouse; Ronald, George, Fritz, Geraldine, Sonia, Barbara, Jesse, Jerry, Angela, Phil, etc. etc. Sit them in a circle and have them pass the rattle on all the big issues; war, peace, hunger, women, religion et al. No action taken till they all agree, however long it takes. Each saluting the divine in one another, respecting one another's good intentions, yet honoring their own points of view as well.

And then my visionary eye expands to see all nations beginning to communicate this way. Circles in the U.N., small enough to allow time for all speakers to have their say, representatives from those circles meeting in larger circles... And all around the world in all the villages and cities I see people gathering and communicating this way. Instead of waiting for Big Daddy Government to come together and make decisions for them...

Sound ridiculous? Unrealistic? Is the human race too immature? Well, perhaps the only solution is as my friend Z says: "This country doesn't need another president. What America needs is a good Mother!" ☆

The Art and Science of Palmistry

by Bodhi Rolle

PALMISTRY'S FOUR CLASSIC TYPES: FIRE

The earliest record I know documenting the work of a palmist occurred about 2500 B.C. in India. It was a palmist-astrologer, a well respected member of society, who foretold that the newborn Siddhartha Gautama would someday become the Buddha. About 2000 B.C., the Vedas began to be recorded in Prakrits, India's earliest written language, which included the Samudrika Shastras on Palmistry. The Chaldeans, the ancient wisemen of the Bible, were well known for their expertise in palmistry and astrology between the 6th and 8th centuries B.C. A century later, Anaxagorus brought Palmistry to Greece from Ionia in Asia Minor. Socrates, Homer, Plato and Aristotle all studied and wrote treatises on the subject. Hispanus (330 B.C.) found a book of palmistry written in golden letters on an altar to god Hermes. He sent it to Alexander the Great as "a study worthy of the attention of an elevated and inquiring mind." The studies of these ancient scribes, the propounders of wisdom during the growth of our major world civilizations, have somehow become the taboo of American society.

The early Greeks organized the science of palmistry into two branches: chirognomy and chiromancy. Chiromancy is the art of reading the lines and signs on the palm. Chirognomy is the science of reading the shape, color and formation of the hands and fingers. Some Greek schools divided the palm into four classic types: earth, air, fire and water. Beginning with the Chirognomic hand type, I can define the general background within which the client's peculiarities and Chiromantic details are placed into perspective. Today I'd like to elucidate the qualities of the Fire type hand.

I always begin by measuring the width of the palm as compared to the length. The archetypal Fire hand has a long palm with short fingers (see diagram). The conic-shaped fingers gradually taper from the wider base to the tip. The palm color is usually rosy or ruddy. The lines of the fire type palm seem to dart like arrows across the palm. They are wider at one end and sharply pointed at the other. Frequently there is a large space between the start of the Head and Life lines (see diagram) and the Mound of Venus, the palm section closest to the thumb, is typically bulbous. The distinctive Fire fingerprint is made up of concentric circles technically called the Whorl (see diagram).

The archetypal Fire person, like a flame, is spontaneous, warming and creative. They are charming, seductive and brilliantly talented. Their most outstanding trait is their ability to love; divine love, romantic love, or X-rated, the Fire person is the best. In leadership, the Fire person likes to be in the spotlight, a "table-dancer", or the first one to the top. Their natural artistry is manifested either in producing artwork or in its appreciation; they need to surround themselves with beauty. They can charm anyone into buying their product, and have a tendency toward fame. The Fire person is so abundantly endowed with talent that, with diligence, they excel in any field.

In marriage, the Fire person may be unable to restrict their interests exclusively toward their spouse. The fiery creative drive may irresponsibly produce too many progeny. In art, the talented Fire person may not have the ambition necessary to carry their natural abilities toward success. Too often the naturally charismatic Fire person may slide through life on the giving of others. They often don't do the work of developing their abundant talents and end up in a career of sales. In the worst instance, the Fire person uses their charm to manipulate others into fulfilling their own selfish needs, like a sociopath. Fire's classic health problem is V.D.

These are the most general characteristics of the Fire person. All may not occur in one person and are often modified by other qualities or special talents. Fire people are found in careers of sales, theater, music and art. Blended with Earth, they are massage therapists or surgeons. With Air, they are sales managers, professional dancers or gallery owners. With Water, they may be poets, military leaders or Kindergarten teachers, practice laying-on of hands or become prostitutes.

Healing oneself for the Fire person comes by exercising self-discipline and moderation. With self-discipline, the naturally loving Fire person's marriage can be a citadel of sanctity and a nurturing place for sane children to grow. With perseverence, the naturally artistic Fire person can develop their talent and continue to produce their art to supreme success. With moderation the naturally magnanamous Fire person can transform egocentricity into loving-kindness.

I hope you enjoyed reading about the fire person. I will talk about Air hand in the next issue of Psychic Life Magazine. May we all live in Peace until then. ☆

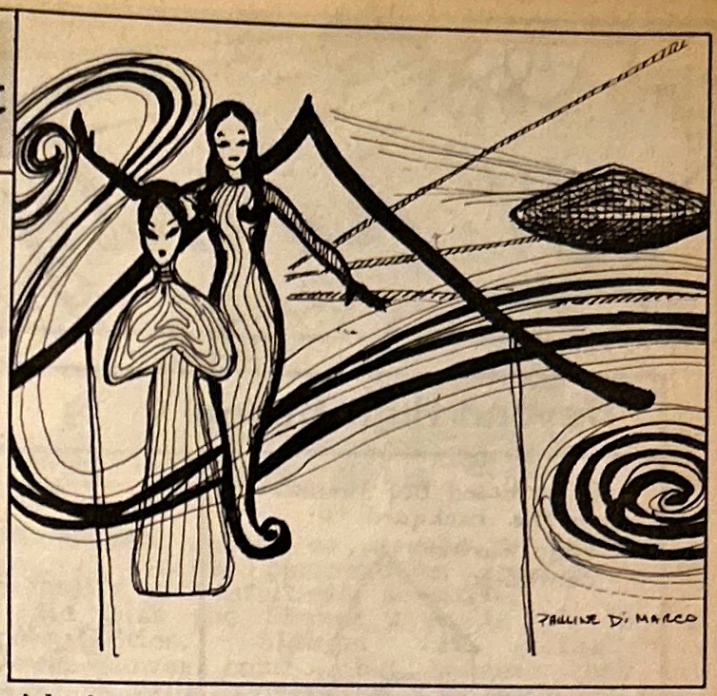
Missionary Healing Report



"Who are you gonna call? Ghostbusters!"

The movie GHOSTBUSTERS, starring Dan Akroyd, is a delightfully polished presentation of the fine art of high tech energy roto rooters.

The Berkeley Psychic Institute of Berkeley has its own version of ghostbusting. It is called the Missionary Healing Program. The Psychics in this program go out into the community and meet everyone from house-rumbling poltergeists to hospital-bound cancer patients wanting a hello. The following is a compilation from a report made by the psychics who went to do this particular missionary healing.

BACKGROUND

The missionary healers were called for a house healing. A missionary healing had been given in the house about 3 years before when one of the owners died. This time they wanted them to look at the energy in the attic room; things got thrown around and light flashes seen at night. Diane, one of the the girls living in the room, was most affected by the energy.

THE HEALING

Upon arrival the healers found "a group" of people all ready to observe the spectacle—and halfway through, one of the neighbors arrived, tape recorder and all; she simply had to listen to the goings-on. In a tour of the house, the healers noticed that the ground floor had a lot of creative social energy. The upstairs, however, felt totally different. As they walked up the stairs, the energy became thick; one of the rooms felt closed and stuffy. And the backroom, although nicely decorated and inviting as a quiet den room, was filled with past time energy, and it was uncomfortable to be there. We left quickly and decided to do the reading downstairs in the living room.

The energy of the upstairs back room looked like a vortex, a landing place for alien beings. There was also the energy of a woman, eastern in appearance. Apparently a former renter, this woman was asked to leave the house because whenever she entered a room her energy, depressing and apathetic, seemed to take over. The readers communicated to the woman, explaining to her on a spirit-to-spirit level that she no longer lived there and she was asked to let go of the people living in the house at present and take her energy with her. They brought the energy of the house into present time and cleared out any other energy that didn't seem in affinity with the present inhabitants.

When finished, the readers took a second look upstairs. "It was great!" The energy had totally changed, the pictures on the wall were noticeable now and so were all the artifacts on the dresser. The view of the room was also noticeable now--it really was a pleasant room.

As the healers concluded, they were aware that the observers wanted information on a spirit level but didn't quite know how to ask. They were given some communication, questions were answered and, they were offered an aura reading at another time.

EPILOGUE

Two weeks later we heard that the eastern lady, who used to stop by or call, had stopped doing so.

Book Review

"The iris is the mirror of the soul, and reflects every process of a person's evolution."

Denny Johnson's "What the Eye Reveals" provides the reader with another way to say hello to spirit; perhaps a method some people would be comfortable with because one can connect the process of saying hello with something identifiable: the structural patterns of the eye.

Johnson takes the reader through a description of primary structures found in the iris and the corresponding personality types as identified by such structures which he calls Jewels, Flowers and Streams.

Jewels are dot-like concentrations found in the fibers of the iris that can range in color from light gold to black. These patterns indicate a thinking, intellectual person; perceptive and inquisitive. Flowers are rounded or curved openings in the fibers of the iris. Flower types are emotional and spontaneous; constantly changing.

Streams are subtle variations in the iris fibers that appear as streaks or patches of color. Stream personalities are physically, mentally, and intuitively sensitive.

He adds the Shaker type to his list of personalities. Shakers are actually a Jewel-Flower combo, but because they are what he calls "movers" of this world, he feels compelled to treat such a class separately.

All throughout the book, the Law of Attraction (between personalities) is: physical opposites and mental opposites attract; similar lessons attract. Therefore: Jewels are attracted to Flowers; Streams to Shakers; Right-Brain Dominant to Left-Brain Dominant; Introverts to Extroverts; and so it goes.

After the guided tour through Rayid concepts, we are introduced to two ways of reading the eye: Random and Systematic. With the Random Approach, you start with the most obvious characteristic and weave that theme into everything you see; the Systematic Approach starts with the general moving towards specifics. Either approach requires the need for "merging."

"Our greatest task is to recognize these patterns within ourselves, and to gently move them towards greater harmony and balance."

When Johnson goes into the Rayid Model chart and its uses, I found my interest fading out. The technical language attains meaning only within the context of each person's life experience.

If you're looking for a step-by-step introduction to the world of iris interpretation, then this book is for you. However, if you are a Stream type like me, you will integrate the Rayid concepts best when you allow yourself to experience what is being described in the book. All you need is a 5x magnifying glass and a small flashlight to look into your eyes. It's a great way to say hello and play. But remember: as the person changes, so does the structural patterns of the iris. We are, after all, the sum of our programming and our responses to such programmming as shown in our life experience. That's what the eye reveals. In present time.

What Color Is Your Aura Today?

ADVERTISEMENT

The first layer of your aura is green. Your body is in a growth period. There is some confusion about your body.

The second layer is orange. I'm seeing that you are healing yourself. I see you pulling your energy out of a few relationships.

The third layer is pale yellow. I'm seeing alot of astral travel in this layer. Your dreams are scattered, not focused.

Your fourth layer is orange and green. You are learning about being in touch with your body. You are being prevented from completing this cycle because you are healing a friend of yours.

The fifth layer is light blue. This concerns your communication with people. It's very clean right now. You have cleaned out alot of invalidation in your communication.

Your sixth layer has gold in it. You just recently brought in alot of amusement about the world. I see you keeping yourself separate from alot of games.

Your seventh layer is emerald green. You're taking a step up in your havingness. I see that you have forgiven yourself for not matching up to the expectation of your father.

SPIRIT PHOTOS

This picture of Yosemite Falls (photographed by Bob Var in August 1983 using an instamatic camera) shows a being caught up in the past life experience.

The more distinct spirit image at the bottom of the photo is the energy left by a man who was killed when he stumbled from the top of the falls.

Above that image, slightly to the left, is the energy of the same enity who is presently experiencing a female incarnation. She is expending lots of energy trying to heal this past life experince. She finds it difficult to be in her body and often experinces vertigo.
